PREFACE

There has been a long-felt want of a really useful edition of Bāṇa's Kādambarī, portions of which the University of Bombay has been prescribing for the study of the Intermediate students in Arts for the last few years. The editions available in the market are more scholarly than useful and the students not conversant with Bāṇa's grandiloquent style find it very difficult to read his work independently. The difficulties of the students are manifold and even good students of Sanskrit Literature are bewildered at the sight of huge compounds and lengthy sentences. We have attempted in the following pages to meet the real needs of the average student and we hope that with our edition in his hands the average student can comfortably understand Bāṇa.

We have adopted a somewhat novel method in translating Bāṇa's lengthy sentences. We have cut them in smaller suitable and reasonable units and presented in the English translation short sentences. We feel that if some such method is not adopted, the English translation would appear cumbersome.

We are very thankful to our friend Mr. L. S. Deuskar, M. A., for the very useful help rendered by him from time to time. It was his continued assistance that has contributed considerably to the timely publication of this edition. Our special thanks are due to Mr. Mangesh Narayan Kulkarni, the proprietor of the Karnatak Publishing House and to the members of his staff for their efficiency and sincere co-operation. But for their help, this edition would hardly have seen the light of day. We also take this opportunity to thank our numerous other friends for the assistance they rendered and the encouragement they gave us.

INTRODUCTION

1 Kathā and Ākhyāyikā

Kāvya in Sanskrit Literature can be safely divided into three parts—गद्य, पद्य and मिश्र. (“गद्यं पद्यं च मिश्रं च काव्यं त्रिविधैव व्यवस्थितम्” or “गद्यं पद्यं च मिश्रं च काव्यादि त्रिविधं स्मृतम्।”) Metre was never considered as the essential characteristic or requisite of काव्य for Indian writers have demonstrated that a charming काव्य could be written as much in verse as in prose or in a mixed form of prose and verse. Hence the three-fold classification of काव्य. The गद्यकाव्य which Daṇḍin, the author of काव्यादर्श defines as “अपादः पदसन्तानो गद्यम्” is further sub-divided into Kathā and Ākhyāyikā. Indian rhetoricians have tried to distinguish these two species of the गद्यकाव्य. In this they seem to have been guided by certain specific models before them. Thus Rudraṭa in trying to distinguish them seems to have had before his mind Bāṇa’s “Kādambarī” and “Harṣacaritam”. The former is regarded as an illustration of Kathā while the latter of an Ākhyāyikā. The following lines may help the student to form an idea about the principles which seem to have weighed upon the mind of the rhetoricians when they endeavoured to distinguish the Kathā from the Ākhyāyikā. (1) Both the Kathā and the Ākhyāyikā are narrative works and as such deal with narration. The person or the character who narrates the incidents, however, is not the same. Kathā is told either by the hero himself or by any other person while in an Ākhyāyikā the narrator is none else but the hero himself. To tell one’s merits or demerits is not considered to be a fault here for the speaker is simply a recorder of events—Cf. (आख्यायिका) नायकेनैव वाच्या अन्या (कथा) नायकेनेतरेण वा । स्वगुण-विश्लिष्यादेषो नात्र भृतार्यशंसिनः ॥”. This, however, cannot be a hard and fast rule for we find that an Ākhyāyikā is also narrated by a person other than the hero. Cf. the following observation of Daṇḍin.

अपि स्वनियमो दृष्टस्तत्राप्यन्यैस्सीरणात् ।

अन्यो वक्ता स्वयं वेति कीदृग्वा भेदकारणम् ॥

(2) An attempt is therefore made to find a distinction between the two on the ground of the metres employed in the two and the designations given to the sections or divisions of the two varieties of prose-compositions. The sections of an Ākhyāyikā are called उच्छ्वास while those of a Kathā are styled लम्भs. The metres employed in the former are वक्त्र and अपरवक्त्र while in the latter the आर्या metre mostly predominates. Here, again, Dandin points out that a demarkation based upon these lines cannot be final since the author of a Kathā can as well name his sections as उच्छ्वास or can employ वक्त्र and अपरवक्त्र metres in his composition in the same proportion as the आर्या one. Cf.

वक्त्रं चापरवक्त्रं च सोच्छ्वासत्वं च भेदकं
चिह्नमाख्यायिकायाश्चेत् प्रसङ्गेन कथास्वपि ॥
आर्यादिवत्प्रवेशः किं न वक्त्रपरवक्त्रयोः ।
भेदश्च दृष्टो लम्भादिरुच्छ्वासो वास्तु किं ततः ॥

(3) In view of this a third principle to distinguish the two kinds of compositions seems to have been discovered. This is based upon the nature of the subject-matter and the form or structure of the two. In the Ākhyāyikā we get in prose a detailed eulogy or panegyric on the poet's family while the author of a Kathā is satisfied with a brief metrical survey of the virtues of his predecessors. An Ākhyāyikā deals with some historical episode and the author has to stifle his imagination because he is mainly confined to the narration of historical facts and incidents. The Kathā on the other hand is a work of pure and simple imagination with only a grain of truth in it. (“आख्यायिकोपलब्धार्था । प्रबन्धकल्पना कल्पितवृत्तान्ता सत्यार्थाख्यायिका मता ।” “प्रबन्धकल्पनां स्तोकसत्यां प्राज्ञाः कथां विदुः । परम्पराश्रया या स्यात् सा मताख्यायिका बुधैः ॥”). The Kathā contains a fine plot which is skilfully unfolded much to the entertainment of the readers. “कथायां सरसं वस्तु गद्यैरेव विनिर्मितम् ।”. At the beginning there is a salutation in verse and at the same time a mention is made of the conduct of the villainous or the wicked. “आदौ पद्यैर्नमस्कारः खलादेवृत्तकीर्तनम् ।”. The Ākhyāyikā, however, is distinguished by certain catch-words which are deliberately introduced by the poet while in a Kathā there is the total absence of such literary (!) devices. In the one topics like the abductions of a damsel, description of a battle etc. are introduced whereas there are no such topics in the other. Dandin, however, fails to honour this topical distinction for he remarks—

“कन्याहरणसंग्रामविप्रलम्भादयोदयः
सर्गबन्धसमा एव नैते वैशेषिका गुणाः ॥

Though we notice that an attempt is thus made to distinguish the one species of गद्यकान्य from the other, it must be remarked that the distinction is merely academic or theoretical and too subtle to be observed in practice. One and the same composition can easily be recognised as an illustration of both the kinds of prose-compositions. Daṇḍin himself admits this for he observes

“तत्कथाख्यायिकेत्येका जातिः संज्ञाद्वयाङ्किता ।”

Kathā and Ākhyāyikā, according to him, constitute but one species denoted by two names. Daṇḍin ultimately leaves the problem of naming one particular piece of prose-composition either as a Kathā or an Ākhyāyikā to be solved or decided by the author himself. He may style his narrative work as a Kathā or an Ākhyāyikā. At the same time it should be remembered that the ‘Kādambārī’ of Bāṇa and the ‘Vāsavadattā’ of Subandhu have been quoted as illustrations of Kathā while the historical romance viz. the ‘Harṣacaritam’ of the former author has been often mentioned to illustrate the Ākhyāyikā type of prose-composition.

II Subandhu and Bāṇa.

Bāṇa is one of the very few Indian writers whose names have been written in golden letters in the corridors of Sanskrit Literature. The reason is not merely the excellent character of his romances and the poetic ability that he had displayed therein but also the data which he provides to fix the date of certain authors that preceded him. In his introductory stanzas to his “Harṣacaritam” he mentions the great author of the ‘Mahābhārata,’ the lyric poet Śālavāhana, the epic writer Pravarasena, the dramatists Bhāsa and Kālidāsa, the story-teller Guṇāḍhya, the prose-writers Bhaṭṭāra Haricandra and the author of ‘Vāsavadattā’ and lastly Ādhyarajā about whom nothing much is known and who has given enough food for the orientalists to record serious misapprehensions regarding the very existence of a person of that name if not to talk of the place where he lived and the work or works which he wrote. The author of the ‘Vāsavadattā’ has been highly praised by Bāṇa in the stanza कवीनामगलद्वयं नूनं वासवदत्तया । शक्तयेव पाण्डुपुत्राणां गतया कर्णगोचरम् ॥ A question now arises whether this is a reference to Subandhu, the author of the extant Vāsavadattā or to some other person who wrote a work of that name—a work which is now lost to us. It is difficult to decide the question one way or the other. The data about the life of Subandhu is too meagre. In the 13th stanza of his introduction to ‘Vāsavadattā,’ he calls himself सृजनैकबन्ध which is regarded by some as giving a personal touch but the expression may as well be interpreted as 'an intimate of none but the virtuous'. Another tradition makes him the nephew of Vararuci ('श्रीवररुचिभगिनेयः'). According to another story he was by birth a Kaśmirian Brahmin. Bāṇa has also left us in the dark regarding the author of the Vāsavadattā. This scanty data about the life of Subandhu cannot lead us any further to decide the problem we are at present tackling. There are some references to Subandhu's name both in the Literature and the Inscriptions. Vākpati says of himself "He takes pleasure in the poetry of Bhāsa, Kālidāsa, Subandhu and and Haricandra," (Gaudavaha, V. 800). Vāmana quotes Vāsavadattā in his work. The author of an Inscription dated 808 A. D. endeavours to imitate the style of the Vāsavadattā" (Cf. Kielhorn—'Epigraphia Indica' 6, 239 ff.) In latter times also Subandhu has been praised as the first poet. It appears from these references to his name that Subandhu was recognised as a celebrated authority in the branch of literature founded by him and stars of the highest magnitude such as Kavirāja, Rājasekhara etc. honoured him and eyed with awed suspense. Subandhu even now passes as the 'man of the fame of pun on every word.' Owing to this unique contribution of his to enrich the treasures of Sanskrit Literature, Dr. Winternitz, Dr. Peterson, Mr. Chiplunkar and other orientalists believed that Bāṇa refers to this Subandhu, the author of the extant Vāsavadattā in the Harṣacarita stanza quoted above. Dr. Peterson, no doubt, sponsored just the opposite view in the Introduction to his edition of the 'Kādambarī' where he observes—"For that after the graceful string of extravagant and indecent puns presented by the present Vāsavadattā and received with approval into the national Literature, a reversion should have been possible to the chastity, alike of sentiment and of diction, of Bāṇa and Bhavabhūti would be a literary miracle almost incredible." But this very Doctor who advocated the view that the Vāsavadattā praised by Bāṇa could not have been the 'worthless production now extant under that name,' had to revise his judgment later and came to believe that Subandhu's work is the same as the work of that name referred to by Bāṇa (see Peterson's Introduction to सुभाषितावली P. 133). These protagonists of the pro-Subandhu theory are inclined to accept the latter half of the 6th century as the terminus a quo of Subandhu's Vāsavadattā while they regard the date of Bāṇa's Harṣacaritam as its terminus ad quem.

But Prof. Gajendragadkar challenges this date of Subandhu in his scholarly Introduction to his edition of the Harṣacaritam. He is not prepared to admit Subandhu as the predecessor of Bāṇa but makes a very clever attempt to prove that Subandhu was the successor of Bāṇa. He advances the very sound theory that Bāṇa in the Introductory verse to his Harṣacaritam does not allude to Subandhu's Vāsavadattā which is definitely regarded as a Kathā but to some Ākhyāyikā bearing that title but which is now unfortunately lost to us. He brings in the evidence of Patañjali to prove that an Ākhyāyikā of that name did exist at one time. In his opinion the position of the verse as it stands in the Harṣacaritam points out to the fact that Bāṇa refers to an Ākhyāyikā and not to a Kathā—a thing which clearly indicates that Bāṇa has some other work in his mind and not the Vāsavadattā of Subandhu. He further says that there is nothing in Subandhu's work that would merit the glowing encomium bestowed upon it by such a master of Sanskrit language as Bāṇa. Again, “Subandhu is so complete a slave to his mad ambition of pun on every word that he cares not an iota for his plot which is full of improbabilities and absurdities. Subandhu is a plagiarist out and out for there is indeed very little that can be called his own.....” These are some of the many arguments advanced by the learned Professor in support of his contention. But this is only one side of the question. It has the other side as well and it is our concern here to summarise some of the arguments advanced by the stalwarts on the side of the pro-Subandhu theory.

The form of the stanza in which Bāṇa refers to the Vāsavadattā is true to the form of Subandhu's Vāsavadattā. The puns on वासवदत्तया and कर्णगोचरम् cannot escape one's notice. Again, the motive of Subandhu in writing the book speaks for his priority over Bāṇa. Subandhu at the end of the introductory verses to his Romance has clearly stated that his aim in writing the book is not the clever working of the plot and the sifting of the material at his disposal but to indicate several wonders or miracles which a master of Sanskrit Language is capable of achieving. (“सरस्वतीदत्तवरप्रसादः चक्रे सुबन्धुः सुजनैकबन्धुः । प्रत्यक्षरश्लेषमयप्रबन्धविन्यासवैदग्ध्यनिधिर्निबन्धम् ॥”) Prof. Gajendragadkar even admits that Subandhu has succeeded in giving to the Sanskrit world a treasury of puns, be they obtruse or unexalted. Bāṇa, on the other hand, thinks this punning-business as subordinate to the artistic working of the plot of his Romances and the successful delineation of his characters. If Subandhu were to come after Bāṇa he would have certainly incorporated some of the beautiful shots from Bāṇa's Romances as he has definitely copied some from Kālidāsa and his other literary ancestors. On the contrary we get from him a composition known for its meagre quality and total absence of characterisation. At the same time it appears quite strange that Bāṇa the reputed author of the 'Kādambarī' and the Harṣacaritam should so much extol the Vāsavadattā which is full of glaring faults. The plot of the Romance seems to have been worked out without any special effort on the part of the author with the result that it is of a mediocre type. Subandhu reveals a total lack of the knowledge of geography. His characters never speak and if at all they try to speak they give us long descriptive speeches which certainly appear to be unnatural and absurd. The fact that the lovers in the Romance of Subandhu partake of 'mute eloquence' when they are least expected to do so seems to be highly preposterous. If we compare the scene in the Vindhya-forest as described by Subandhu with the incidents of the eighth Act of the 'Mālatīmādhavam' where also the lovers do not indulge in long speech, we will have to conclude that the latter is highly charming because the lovers there are not wholly mute. Subandhu has driven his lovers into slumber—and that too in broad day-light—because thereby alone his purpose has been achieved. This presented him with an opportunity of describing the विप्रलम्भगृहकार or love in separation. He was bent upon describing it and he did not mind sacrificing the working of his plot on the altar of his vain ambition. The Romance, again, is teemed with exaggerations, absurdities and episodes absolutely inconceivable. The dream of Vāsavadattā is in itself an absurdity for not only that she sees a very handsome youth in her dream but comes to know of his name and lineage there and then. The fight-episode is inconceivable. His ardent passion for exhibiting the powers of the Sanskrit Language has many a time landed him into digressions which are unmerited and unwanted. The sequel of the story again, is somehow worked up and surely betrays the hand of a second-rate poet for we cannot account in any way for the sudden appearance of Makaranda on the scene where the lovers are finally united. How could he trace the lovers to that region in the dense, impenetrable Vindhya-forest? This is beyond human ken. The silence of Makaranda about what happened in the capital of Śrīgāraśekhara after the hero had abducted the heroine is certainly strange. Subandhu did not mind all this because his mission had come to an end with the description of the dreadful fight and therefore somehow brings the story to a close. Subandhu is the chief actor in the Romance. His work fails to delight critics of polished literary taste. On the whole Subandhu is a poet of meagre calibre. If this is so, why has Bāṇa so much praised him in the verse quoted above? This is because of Subandhu's प्रत्यक्षरश्लेषमयप्रबन्धविन्यासवैदग्ध्य-निधित्व. Bāṇa has evidently Subandhu's fame of pun on every word in mind when he wrote the verse. That Bāṇa has an admiration for such a composition is clear from his following observation in his Romance “उत्कृष्टकविगद्यमिव विविधवर्णश्रेणीप्रतिपाद्यमानानेकनूतार्थसंचयम्”. This clearly shows that the author of the Romance is referring to the work of Subandhu. The subject-matter, the numerous descriptive passages—describing the rising and the setting of the Sun and the Moon, the seasons, the mountains—that run riot in his Romance indicate that Bāṇa had before his mind Subandhu's Vāsavadattā when he wrote his two Romances. Subandhu again, has utilised quite a number of familiar fairy-tale motives such as love in dreams, talking birds, magic steed which have been copied by Bāṇa also. To Bāṇa as well as to Subandhu long and unending descriptions of persons, high epithets, pictures of the night, the spring, are important in themselves. Both are adepts in the Kavya-style but Subandhu is masterly in paranomasia. The puns, though they seem to be absurd to us, had charmed the then savants or Pundits. In the descriptions of nature the similes employed by Subandhu are almost inexhaustible. The endlessly long descriptions with infinitely long compounds are often intercepted by discourses in very short sentences. It is these excellences of Subandhu that induced Bāṇa to place him as a model before himself.

✓ In spite of Bāṇa's debt to Subandhu, Bāṇa is appreciated and Subandhu meets with strong condemnation because Bāṇa avoided all the stylistic and structural faults of Subandhu and has skilfully succeeded in concealing his debt to him. Subandhu's work pales into insignificance before those of Bāṇa on account of the latter's merits and excellences. Both of them loved श्लेष or punning on words but to Subandhu it was the very essence of a prose-composition i. e. it was the end in itself while Bāṇa regarded it as subsidiary and indulged in it only occasionally. Subandhu sacrificed everything—the plot, the characterisation, the rasas, perspicuity etc.—to achieve his goal viz., प्रत्यक्षरश्लेष etc. but Bāṇa, on the other hand, has thoroughly exploited the श्लेष for rendering his compositions more poetical and livelier. Subandhu's श्लेष is शब्दमय while Bāṇa's is अर्थान्मक in addition. To Subandhu सत्कविचन was सुश्लेषवकृष्टनापटु while to Bāṇa it was स्फुरत्कलालापविलासकोमल. We find that they have done their best to bring out their respective point of view in their works. A comparison of any of their numerous descriptions would surely be instructive in this direction. As we find that Bāṇa has beaten Subandhu practically in every respect, we cannot but regard him as posterior to Subandhu. Otherwise we would have certainly seen some of the gracefulness that we notice in Bāṇa's Romances in the Vāsavadattā. Subandhu borrows from his predecessors. He would have certainly imitated the art and genius of Bāṇa had he come after him. We admit that what we have said so far is not quite conclusive. Our statements regarding the relation of Bāṇa and Subandhu need to be substantiated. What we want to point out is that the last word on the problem has not been said or written as yet.

Personal History.

It is quite essential and important for every student of Bāṇa that he should know something about the personal history of Bāṇa. Fortunately for us Bāṇa has himself given an account of a part of his life in his other work viz. Harṣacharitam. There are several other references to Bāṇa elsewhere in Sanskrit Literature; but his own account is certainly of much use.

Very few Sanskrit literati have left for posterity an account of their lives and literary pursuits. Even the great Kālidāsa has not cared to leave for us a detailed account of his life. We ought to be therefore indebted to Bāṇa for showing this 'courtesy' to posterity.

In the introductory verses to Kādambarī Bāṇa has mentioned some of his ascendants by name. Kubera was a Vātsjyāyana Brahmin, respected by the entire world and several Gupta kings [Cf. बभूव वात्स्यायनवंशसंभवो द्विजो जगद्गीतगुणोऽग्रणीः सताम् । अनेकगुसार्चितपादपङ्कजः कुबेरो नामांश इव स्वयंभुवः ॥] He had a son called Arthapati who was also well-versed in the Vedas and performed several sacrifices. His son was called Chitrabhānu. This Chitrabhānu was the father of Bāṇa. The omission of पाशुपत is rather strange. The genealogy as given in the Kādambarī would thus appear to be :

अर्थपति
|
चित्रभानु
बाण.

Bāṇa modestly mentions in the last stanza in the Introduction that 'such and such a Brahmin who was not a great scholar has written this Kāthā' cf. द्विजेन तेनाक्षतकण्ठकौण्डिन्या महामनोमोहमलीमसान्धया । अलङ्घ-वैदग्ध्यविलासमुग्धया धिया निबद्धेयमतिद्वयी कथा ॥ Bāṇa's preceptor appears to be one Bharvu cf. नमामि भवोश्चरणाम्बुजद्वयं etc.

In the Harṣacharitam we find a fuller account of Bāṇa's life. Bāṇa first narrates the account of the birth of Sāraswatā ; one of his remote ancestors who was born of the sage Dadhichi from Sarsawatī the Goddess of learning. This Sāraswatā was brought up along with her own son Vatsa by Akshamālīka— wife of Dadhichi's brother. Sāraswatā for the love he bore for his foster-brother taught him all the lore he himself possessed in virtue of his birth (he was the son of the goddess of learning) and established him in the place called Prītikūṭa in that district. As for himself he passed his life in asceticism. But Vatsa was the progenitor of the Vātsyayana race. [Cf. अथ सारस्वतो मातुर्महिम्ना यौवनारम्भ एवाविर्भूताशेषविद्यासम्भारस्तस्मिन् सवयसि भ्रातरि प्रेयसि प्राणसमे सुहृदि वत्से वाङ्मयं समस्तमेव सञ्चारयामास । चकार च कृतदारपरिग्रहस्यास्य तस्मिन्नेव प्रदेशे प्रीत्या प्रीतिकूटनामानं निवासम् ।] From this Vatsa emanated a huge line of successors [Cf. अथ तस्मात्प्र-वर्धमानादिपुरुषजनितात्मचरणोज्जतिनिर्गतप्रघोषः प्रावर्तत विपुलो वंशः । यस्मादजायन्त वात्स्यायना नाम गृहमुनयः । तेषु चैवमुत्पाद्यमानेषु, संसरति संसारे, यात्सु युगेषु, अवतीर्णे कलौ, वहत्सु वत्सरेषु, व्रजत्सु वात्सरेषु अतिक्रामति च काले, प्रसवपरम्पराभिरनवरतमापतति विकासिनि वात्स्यायनकुले, क्रमेण कुबेरनामा वैनतेय इव गुरुपक्षपाती द्विजो जन्म लेभे ।] This Kubera had four sons called Achuta, Isāna, Hara, and Pāśupata. Pāśupata had a son called Arthapati. This Arthapati had eleven sons of whom one was Chitrabhānu, the father of Bāṇa. Bāṇa's mother was Rājadevi.

Thus we have:—

Note that here it is shown that अर्थपति was the grandson (and not son) of Kubera. Bāṇa lost his mother while he was yet a child and he was fondled very much by his father (जातस्नेहस्तु नितरां पितृवास्य मातृतामकरोत् ।). When Bāṇa was fourteen years old, his father too passed away. This led to Bāṇa going astray and choosing bad company. See how realistic is Bāṇa's description!—संस्थिते च पितरि महता शोकेनाभिलमनुप्राप्तो दिवानिशं दह्यमानहृदयः कथंकथमपि कतिपयान्दिवसानात्मगृह एवानैषीत् । गते च विरलतां शोके शनैः शनैरविनयनिदानतया स्वातन्त्र्यस्य, कुतूहलबहुलतया च बालभावस्य, धैर्यप्रतिपक्षतया च यौवनारम्भस्य शैशवोचितान्यनैकानि चापलान्याचरन्निवरो बभूव । Bāṇa then goes on to enumerate a long list of his companions who included several types of virtuous and vicious persons e. g. a snake-charmer, nuns, physician, goldsmith, artist, actor, dancing girl, chambermaid, juggler etc. No wonder that such company would not let him rest content with the home of his great forefathers. He left his house and went round various countries, visited several cities, palaces and universities. At long last he got tired of this wanderlust and went back to his sweet home. He was well received by his comrades and relatives and among them he was enjoying heavenly bliss. (तत्र च चिरदर्शनाभिनवीभूतस्नेहसद्भावैः ससंस्तव-प्रकटितज्ञातेयैरासौस्त्वदिवस इवाभिनन्दिताभिगमनो बालमित्रमण्डलस्य मध्यगतो मोक्षसुखमिवान्वभवत् ।)

One day during summer, while Bāṇa was resting after finishing his meals, his half-brother, Chandrasena ushered in a courier who had brought a letter from Kṛṣṇa, the brother of King Harṣa. The letter was a suggestion to go urgently to see Lord Harṣa. Bāṇa, though not without hesitation, accepted the suggestion and started for the capital next morning. Before setting out he performed all the due rites and took care to move his right foot first (प्रथमचलितदक्षिणचरणः !), On the first day he crossed the Chandrikā forest and went to a village called Mallakūtā. There he stayed with his brother and friend (हृदयनिर्विशेषेण भ्रात्रा सुहृदा च) Jagatpati. Next day he crossed the river Bhūgīrathī, and passed the night in a village called Yaṣṭigrahaka. On the following day, he reached Harṣa's camp near the town Maṇi.

He took his bath and food and late in the afternoon, he went to the palace-gate in the company of a eunuch called Pariyātra. They passed through a stable full of horses and when Bāṇa, struck with wonder, asked what the king did there, was told that that was the stable of the king's great elephant called Darṣasuta. Bāṇa waited there for a long time and the door-keeper's admonition brought him round to his senses and so he went further to see king Harṣa. The king first received him with scant courtesy; but later showed him much favour.

After staying there for about four or five months Bāṇa returned home in the beginning of autumn. He was cordially greeted by his friends and relatives. One of his cousins requested him to narrate an account of Harṣa's life. Bāṇa promised to tell the next day a part of the long story of Harṣa's life which he thought would not be finished even in a hundred lives.

Thereafter starts an account of the great Harṣa with which we are not concerned here. The autobiography of Bāṇa here comes to an end. It will be noticed that Bāṇa has said nothing about what he did in his later life. He did not finish the whole of his Kādambarī which was completed by his son called Bhūṣaṇa Bāṇa or Pulinda. Cf. याते दिवं पितरि तद्वचसैव सार्धं विच्छेदमाप भुवि यस्तु कथाप्रबन्धः । दुःखं सतां तदस-मासिकृतं विलोक्य प्रारब्ध एव स मया न कवित्वदर्पात् ॥ It will, however, be seen from the Uttarabhāga of Kādambarī that Bāṇa's son was by no means inferior to his father.

Bāṇa's father-in-law was the poet Mayūra. Mayūra was suffering from leprosy and so composed a सूर्यशतक (a hundred hymns addressed to the sun) which is said to have relieved him from the disease. A legend says that Bāṇa once had a small quarrel with his wife who was very much vexed. He was requesting her again and again to be pleased. He said: गतप्राया रात्रिर्वरतनु शशी शीर्यत इव । प्रदीपोऽयं निद्रावश-मुपगतो घूर्णित इव । प्रणामान्तो मानं त्यजसि न तथापि क्षणमहो...He fumbled at the end of the third foot and could not arrange the fourth one. Mayūra, as though, curious to know what was going on appeared there and suddenly recited the fourth foot viz. कुचप्रत्यासत्त्या हृदयमपि ते चण्डि कठिनम् ।. This enraged Bāṇa and he gave him a curse that he would suffer from leprosy.

Besides, Kādambarī and Harṣacharitam Bāṇa has composed Chañḍāśataka—a collection of hundred stanzas propitiating goddess Chañḍī. He is also the author of a play named Pārvatī-Pariṇaya, the theme of which is the same as that of Kālidāsa's Kumarsambhava.

Bāṇa seems to have been a rich man. The description of his household in the Harṣacharitam is a case in point. Before he set out on his journey, he tells us, there was no need for him to go abroad either for acquiring learning or amassing wealth. He was a very learned man and was conscious about it when he was called भुजंग—He said—नार्हसि मामन्यथा संभावयितुमवशिष्टमिव । ब्राह्मणोऽस्मि जातः सोमपायिनां वंशे वात्स्यायनानाम् । यथाकालमुपनयनादयः कृताः संस्काराः । सम्यक् पठितः साङ्गो वेदः । श्रुतानि यथाशक्ति शास्त्राणि. etc. हर्ष० II. He was a devotee of Śiva. He praises the deity in the beginning of both of his works. He worshipped Śiva before he started on his journey to see Harṣa—Cf. देवदेवस्य विरूपाक्षस्य क्षीरस्नपनपुरःसरां सुरभिक्षुसुमधूपगन्धध्वजकलिविलेपनप्रदीपकबहुलां विधाय पूजां परमया भक्त्या etc. हर्ष० II.

The Vātsyāyana family was famous for its auspicious origin, learning and wealth. Winternitz, however, holds the opinion that the legend narrated by Bāṇa about his pedigree is a pure invention and not a statement of facts. It is not a legend handed down in the family but a myth. Dr. Winternitz observes: "This introduction corresponds to the usual preambles to the Purāṇas which as a rule begin thus:—A Ṛṣi appears in a circle of curious companions and on more or less protracted entreaties narrates the story. In an original manner Bāṇa has explained this kind of stereotyped Pauranic introduction in the narrative of autobiography". We do not propose to go in for a refutation of Winternitz's opinion but it is enough to say that we are in any case indebted to Bāṇa for leaving a clear account of his origin and early life—a thing which no other Sanskrit writer has cared to do.

The Date of Bāṇa.

The date of Bāṇa can be fixed without raising any sophisticated objections. Our ancient fore-fathers had crude and indifferent ideas about history. They neglected it and refrained from keeping any historical record for the guidance of posterity. They not only did not occupy themselves with writing historical works but whenever they could induce themselves to write any work that made the nearest approach to history, they omitted just the facts and events which would have enabled a student of ancient Indian History to reconstruct the lost glories of his 'Vaterland'. Bāṇa's is no doubt a unique case. He has not only given a fuller account of himself but referred to a number of poets and works in his historical Romance. Bāṇa is, as though, a star shining brightly in the cloudy firmament of Indian chronology. Such a star indicates the presence of those other stars that unfortunately happen to be covered by clouds and fog. We infer from the presence of a bright star that others must have shone, are still shining and will twinkle in future howsoever great the opposition of the elements may be. Bāṇa's date has been rightly styled, 'the surest plank in the tottering structure of Indian chronology'. Although Bāṇa has given enough material in his 'Harṣacaritam' to reconstruct his personal history, he has painfully omitted just the evidence which would have been quite valuable for fixing his age. The connotation of the term 'History' as we understand it, seems to be foreign to his mind. His work is only an apology for History for there is nothing in it that would go to prove as to when the book itself was written or when the events so magnificently described in it took place. We are forced to resort to some external evidence to settle amicably the question about his date. The famous Chinese traveller Hieun Tsang who undertook an extensive tour of this country in the 1st half of the 7th century and who assists in determining the age of many a writer in Indian Literature, supplies us with the necessary evidence in the present case. In his memoirs he refers to a very powerful king of Northern India, Harṣavardhana by name, who is definitely not different from king Harṣa, the patron of Bāṇa. The account of the Chinese traveller, no doubt, does not strictly tally with that given by Bāṇa; yet the many points of agreement that we notice between the two records are enough to prove the identification of the Chinese Traveller's Harṣavardhana with Bāṇa's Harṣa. Harṣa seems to have reigned over the whole of Northern India from 606 A. D. to 647 A. D. Bāṇa was fairly young when the king in his greatness patronised him. Bāṇa then, must have flourished in the first half of the 7th century. This date is further supported by writers of repute referring to Bāṇa as an authority. Kṣemendra, Ānandavardhana who flourished in the 9th century, Vāmana who lived in the latter half of the 8th century, quote Bāṇa and his works. Some of the writers on rhetorics, who flourished from the 9th to the 12th century A. D. illustrate 'Harṣacaritam' and 'Kādambarī' as instances or specimens of Ākhyāyikā and Kathā respectively. It follows from this that from the 8th or 9th century A. D. Bāṇa and his works had acquired a place of prominence and were regarded authoritative by persons who passed as great authors. This must have taken some time. We can therefore, safely conclude that the 1st half of the 7th century is the probable date of Bāṇa.

The Sources.

After going through the whole of Kādambarī or even after rummaging its pages, one wonders whether the entire huge story is the creation of only one (or rather two as the latter part was written by Bāṇa's son) brain. This is certainly not impossible taking into consideration Bāṇa's wonderful fancy and his power of observation. But the fact appears to be the other way. Like Shakespeare Bāṇa is not creative and original. Shakespeare is said to have derived his plots from either Bocaccio's Decameron or Holinshed's Chronicles but his art lies in the development of the scanty data available to him. The same can be said about Kādambarī. Bāṇa and Kālidāsa derive their plots from the Purāṇas or current fabulous stories. But out of the mist they create beautiful sunshine of wit and intellect.

Bāṇa seems to have derived his plot from the बुहल्लया of गुणादय. This work was written in the Pāṣāṇī language and not in Sanskrit. Unfortunately for us, the original work of गुणादय is no more extant. We have, therefore, no means to scan and analyse the original story and compare it with Bāṇa's Kādambarī. However there are two Sanskrit versions of this lost work; one is बुहल्लयामञ्जरी of क्षेमेन्द्र and the other the कथासरित्सागर of सोमदेव. From the Kāthāsaritsāgara we find that Bāṇa has closely followed the plot though the names in the two versions are different. As regards his abundant use of mythology Bāṇa seems to have drawn upon the eighteen Purāṇas. The difference between the Kāthāsaritsāgara and Kādambarī is that the former is a mere running story, its interest lying in the gigantic plot and extraordinary occurrences while the latter is a great piece of literature. On every page of it is imprinted the great genius of Bāṇa, the representation of human passion. Dr. Peterson says that if the Kāthāsaritsāgara is like bones, then they are dry bones. These dry bones live: but it is because breath has entered into them, sinews and flesh have been covered up with skin. Herein then lies the difference'. Dr. Peterson translates a passage from the romance of Achilles Talins and shows certain analogies and descriptions, sentiments and ideas that are of constant occurrence in Bāṇa while no trace of them is found in the बृहत्कथा of गुणाढ्य. In conclusion he observes "I have merely to call attention to what appears to be a marked resemblance, and to the conclusion which it is possible to draw from that resemblance, if it be once granted, as I think it must, that the writers of Indian renaissance period were not outside the all-embracing influence of Greek letters". This statement is not of course, conclusive until the question of Greek influence in Indian romances is pursued further and therefore no definite conclusion can be drawn as yet.

Kādambarī, it is now clear, is based on a legend which we find in Somadeva's Kathāsaritsāgara (LVIX 22-178) and Kṣemendra's Bṛhatkathāmañjarī (XVI, 183 ff.). That Bāṇa knew the original बृहत्कथा of गुणाढ्य is evident from the following stanza which Bāṇa has inserted in his introductory stanzas at the beginning of हर्षचरितम्. The stanza runs

समुद्दीपितकन्दर्पा कृतगौरीप्रसाधना ।

हरलीलेव नो कस्य विस्मयाय बृहत्कथा ॥

This बृहत्कथा is none other than the famous work of गुणाढ्य written in Paiśāchi. This बृहत्कथा was before Bāṇa's eyes and that story is the skeleton of Bāṇa's great romance. For the story cf. Appendix I.

The Story.

It will be interesting to know succinctly the story of Bāṇa's great Romance viz. Kādambarī. It is very difficult for an average student to wade through the whole of Bāṇa's Kādambarī and understand the whole of it without outside help. A skeleton of the story will possibly lead to a clearer understanding of this Romance. We have therefore attempted to narrate rather briefly the story of Kādambarī.

There was once a king called Śudraka who reigned in Vidiśa, a city on the bank of river Vetravati. Once a Chandāla girl was ushered into his presence. She brought with her a parrot who was well-versed in all the sciences and arts. The King and the noblemen sitting around him were surprised to see a parrot so much educated and asked the parrot to narrate his account. The parrot said that in the

Vindhya forest there is the hermitage of sage Agastya and near it is a lake on the western bank of which stands a huge śālmali tree. He was born there. His mother passed away immediately after his birth. His father brought him up. Once there came a group of hunters; one of the hunters was cruel enough to kill his father and take him away. The parrot still young, fell down on the earth and only through providential help escaped from the cruel hands of the hunters. While he was lying there in that condition, he was taken to a penance grove by one Hārīta who chanced to see him. The father of Hārīta was the great sage Jābālī. On seeing the parrot the sage remarked that 'this wretch is undergoing the consequences of his own misdeeds'. The disciples heard this remark and requested Jābālī to narrate the full account of the parrot. The sage said that there is a great city called Ujjayinī where once ruled a king named Tārāpīḍa. The name of his wife was Vilāsavati and that of his minister was Śukanāsa. The king and Queen were enjoying all the pleasures but the fact that they had no issue pained them much. The Queen did her utmost to propitiate the deities—worship the sages, give donations to Brahmins and observe penance and vows. These things, however, would not persuade wretched Fate to give them a child. Once, however, the King saw in a dream, the moon entering Vilāsavati's mouth. This was considered as a sure sign preceding a son's birth. After a few months the Queen did beget a son who was properly named Chandrāpīḍa. Śukanāsa's wife Manoramā also on the same day got a son who was named Vaiśampāyana. Both the children were brilliant and strong. Chandrāpīḍa's prowess was extraordinary and he could outwit everyone by his intelligence as well. He was sent to a University for education and on completing it he returned home. He was then coronated as heir-apparent. He then went out on an expedition of conquest and roamed through countries and capitals for three years. Once he went a-hunting and by chance saw a kinmara couple running at great speed. In his curiosity to capture it he forgot himself and chased it nobody knows how far. After a long, tiresome, journey he came near a lake which was as huge as an ocean. [The student may note that herewith starts the portion from the Kādambarī prescribed for his intensive study]. The name of the lake was अञ्जोद. Chandrāpīḍa rested there for some time, took bath, ate some wild fruits and roots and bathed the horse Indrāyudha also. As he was lying on the ground, he heard a divine music coming from afar. Anxious to find its source he went towards the direction along the bank of the lake. After some time he saw at the foot of a hill an old shrine of Lord Śiva. There he saw a girl, about eighteen years old, of extraordinary beauty. She was playing on a lute, propitiating Lord Śiva. When she finished her prayers, Chandrāpīḍa approached her and his curiosity made him ask her account. The girl overpowered by grief, fainted. When she recovered from the swoon, Chandrāpīḍa begged her pardon for reminding her of her sorrow. She, however, started narrating her account. She said that on the Hemakūṭa mountain lived a Gandharva called Hamsa. He was her father—her mother's name being Gaurī. She was very dear to them all and was rightly named Mahāśvetā (very white). Once all of them went to that lake for ablution. There she chanced to see two ascetic youths named Puṇḍarīka and Kapīñjala. The former's charms made an impression on Mahāśvetā who suddenly fell in love with him. She enquired of Kapīñjala about the name of the object of her love. While Kapīñjala was telling his account, Puṇḍarīka came forth and placed a flower from his ear on Mahāśvetā's ear. She felt a tingling in her ears and he too was confused and dropped his rosary. Mahāśvetā caught it and immediately wore it round her neck. Later as she was going away, Kapīñjala scolded his friend for his loose behaviour and so Puṇḍarīka asked her to return the rosary. She, however, gave him her own necklace. She went home and sat alone wondering what to do. While she was in such a condition, her friend and servant Taralikā announced the arrival of Kapīñjala. He came in to confess the sorry plight of his friend who was smitten with Love. He requested her to go round to see his poor friend. Mahāśvetā knew not what to do as she had love for her parents whose fair name would be spoiled if she went away like a base woman. Her friend Taralikā advised her to go to see Puṇḍarīka and so out she went. But as she approached the lake, she found her lover dead and his friend weeping by his side. After telling so much of her story Mahāśvetā fainted away. Chandrāpīḍa supported her as she fell and fanned her. He requested her not to continue the story but she went on. On seeing her lover dead and gone she decided to follow him to the other world. But suddenly she heard a voice saying 'My child, Mahāśvetā, you must live, for you will meet him again'. The divine figure which said this flew up into the sky with the body of Puṇḍarīka and Kapīñjala followed it into the skies. The divine words of that figure had kept her life which she thought was worth nothing. She stayed on there waiting for her lover to return. At the end of her story she covered her face with the end of her garment and unable to control her grief sobbed aloud. Chandrāpīḍa was already much impressed by Mahāśvetā's charm and he besought her to give up the idea of putting an end to her life. As it was then evening, both of them lay down on beds of leaves: Chandrāpīḍa then asked Mahāśvetā why her friend Taralikā had deserted her. She then told that she had a friend named Kādambarī born in the family of the Apsarases. She had made a resolve, much to her parent's grief, that she would not marry so long as Mahāśvetā remained a virgin. Taralikā was sent to her that very morning, to request her to give up her resolve. Next morning Taralikā appeared with a messenger from Kādambarī: the latter informed Mahāśvetā of her firm resolve. After deep thought, Mahāśvetā decided to go herself and requested Chandrāpīḍa to accompany her. He consented and both of them went to Hemakūṭa. Kādambarī, as she was enquiring about the stranger, saw him face to face and fell in love with him. When subsequently she offered him betel-nut her hand touched his and she suddenly drew it back. In the meantime a parrot and a starling came in quarrelling and this gave rise to much jest. As they all were joking, a call came to Mahāśvetā from the king. Chandrāpīḍa was requested to stay on, in the meantime on the pleasure hill. Kādambarī reproached herself for her condition and Chandrāpīḍa too was none too happy. At night a necklace from Kādambarī was brought to him by Taralikā and Madalekhā. He dismissed them and ascended the top of the tower. Kādambarī too went to the terrace. It was clear that they were desperately in love with each other. Keyūra suddenly announced to Chandrāpīḍa that Kādāmbārī was coming there. When she came both of them sat on the ground and he told her the whole of his account—his parents, ministers, kingdom and capital. Next day, however, he had to start back for his capital. He went to the place where he met Mahāśvetā and to that place had also come his searching anxious companions. Then he went to his camp where his father's message was awaiting him. All started home but Chandrāpīḍa did not forget to send a message to his sweetheart. Patralekhā, his maid-servant, was left behind to take care of Kādambarī. He reached home and when Patralekhā came back he asked her privately about Kādambarī. She told him how Kādambarī was in love. Chandrāpīḍa wanted to escape somehow from Ujjayini. He sent a loving message to Kādambarī and approached his father for permission to go away to meet Vaiśampāyana. His father too opened the subject of his marriage and he was thus very glad. He then went in search of his camp of which Vaiśampāyana was the general. But he could not get any news about his friend. He asked several persons but none would tell him the true account. At last he met a group of old persons who told him that Vaiśampāyana while he was coming back with the army stopped near the Acchoda lake. There he suddenly seemed to remember something and he was overcome by terrible grief and decided to stay on there. All requested him to go home but he would not listen to anybody. When this news reached Ujjayini, Tārāpīḍa cursed his son and Sukanāsa was very much enraged at his son's absurd behaviour. Chandrāpīḍa requested his father for permission to go to the Acchoda lake. After great hesitation it was granted. He set out and when he traversed three-fourths of the distance he met Meghanāda who was sent back by Patrālekha. He could not, however, find Vaiśampāyana anywhere. At last he went to see Mahāśvetā. She said "I came back from Hemakūṭa and one day saw a Brahmin youth. He suddenly tried to make advances to me but I kept him at an arm's distance. One night he stealthily approached me with his love-song and I, knowing not what to do, cursed him to be a parrot. Subsequently, I learnt that he was your friend".

On hearing this Chandrāpīḍa fell dead. While all were weeping, Kādambarī came in to find her Lord dead. In the meantime a heavenly voice assured Mahāśvetā and Kādambarī of the good fortune waiting for them and asked them to hold on and preserve Chandrāpīḍa's body. All were stunned at these developments except Patrālekha who suddenly took Indrāyudhu out of his keeper's hands and plunged, along with him into the lake. Then, to the wonder of all, emerged from the lake Kapīñjala who told them that he was cursed by a Vaimānika to be a horse. He was, however, reassured that he would regain his old form on the death of his master. Then he told Mahāśvetā how in the pursuit of the figure that took away Puṇḍarīka's body, he went to the Moon and how the Moon assured him that Puṇḍarīka's body was taken away by him as a revenge against his bad remarks about the Moon and looking to the grief of Mahāśvetā how the Moon had decided to establish their re-union. He was further told that Puṇḍarīka would be born as Vaiśampāyana and the person recently cursed by Mahāśvetā was none other than Puṇḍarīka. She was overwhelmed with grief on hearing this. Chandrāpīḍa's body was being well preserved by Kādambarī when one day his father and mother came round to see their dead son. They were pained to find their son's plight but wondered at the fact that his body instead of withering away was, on the contrary getting increasing radiance. Kādambarī fainted at Tārāpīḍa's sight. Subsequently the King and Queen went away and instead of going to the capital stayed in a hermitage.

[Here ends the account of sage Jābālī]. All this account which was heard by the parrot as well assured him that he was Vaiśampāyana. Jābālī further told his audience that at the end of this life the parrot would again become Vaiśampāyana and live till eternity. The parrot was thinking of putting an end to his life when Kāpīñjala was ushered in. He knew who the parrot was and so fondled and caressed him. The parrot's whereabouts he got from the all-knowing Śvetaketu. After some months the parrot's wings grew and he went north in quest of Chandrāpīḍa. One day, however, he found himself in a net. He requested the wild man to let him go. But he said that he caught him because the daughter of the king of Chāṇḍālas had asked him to catch that beautiful parrot which escaped from Jābālī's hermitage. The parrot was taken to her but he refused to utter a word. The parrot then told king Śūdraka that he knew not why he was brought there. [Here ends the parrot's tale].

Then the king Śūdraka sent for the Chāṇḍāla girl who told him that what he heard from the parrot was the account of his former birth and that she had brought his friend to him. She then suddenly disappeared. Śūdraka then developed longing for Kādambarī.

One day Kādambarī weary with preserving Chandrāpīḍa's dead body embraced it; and Oh wonder! he regained consciousness. He told her that he had cast off the body of Śūdraka. He also told her that Puṇḍarīka too was now free from the curse and lo! Puṇḍarīka was actually seen coming from the sky. All of them then met Tārāpīḍa, Sukanāsa, Mahāśvetā and thereafter all lived in highest joy.

Bāṇa's Style.

Bāṇa's prose is often compared to a tropical forest where entrance is difficult on account of a thick undergrowth in the form of lengthy sentences and where after securing entrance progress is impossible due to the gaping wild animals in the form of unknown words and huge compounds. The most striking feature of his style is his indefatigable enthusiasm to mention every imaginable detail and his almost wonderful fancy. He waxes eloquent whenever opportunity to bring in grandeur presents itself. But while he indulges in lofty ideas and brilliant descriptions, the uninitiated reader gets tired and sick, for it takes the poor reader a pretty long time to understand him and much more to appreciate him. The description of Mahāśvetā for instance, makes the reader very uncomfortable. For, quite naturally, the reader is anxious to know how the theme is developing; but he has to pass through an ordeal only to know that such and such a girl was seen by Chandrāpīḍa.

(This does not, of course, mean that Bāṇa is mediocre and deserves to be neglected. For, leaving aside his such and other faults, he is one of the brightest gems in Sanskrit Literature. The very few stanzas he has composed show the limpid flow of his style. Even in his prose this is not unnoticeable. He is extremely brilliant when he is writing short and pithy sentences. His vast knowledge of mythology, his unending vocabulary, (he has used the following words for निनाद—रणित, नाद, रसित, झङ्कार, रव, कोलाहल, कृजित, ध्वनि, शब्द, स्वन, कलकल, हुंकृत, कणित, गर्जित, चीकृत, आक्रन्दित, ध्वान etc.! The reader can also collect the synonyms for समूह, करि etc.) His use of the several shades of the meanings of words, his repeated resort to puns and double entendre—all these show that he was a voracious reader. His power of observation, his wide travels, his association with several types of people (as mentioned in the first उद्घास of हर्षचरितम्) gave him a fund of knowledge to draw upon.

Style or रीति in Sanskrit Literature are divided by Dandin in the first परिच्छेद of काव्यादर्श (St. 40) into two varieties viz. वैदर्भी and गौडी. These two divisions are based on the three गुण or qualities viz. माधुर्य or sweetness, प्रसाद or lucidity and ओजस or vigour. माधुर्य is a quality that can be easily understood. प्रसाद is that quality which is capable of making the incidents described stand before the reader's mind, ओजस requires profuseness of compound to bring in vigour. माधुर्य and प्रसाद form the main feature of the style called वैदर्भी and ओजस is the principal characteristic of गौडी. The main feature of Bāṇa's style is his vigour. He is a prolific writer, never getting tired, never stopping or faltering in his huge descriptions. But inspite of this भोजस, the other गुण viz.; माधुर्य and प्रसाद are not absent in Bāṇa. This can be seen when he writes short sentences which are simply brilliant.) Cf. for instance Kapīñjala's admonition (p. 23). That Bāṇa was a lucid writer is also evident from the fact that Kādambarī has been quoted as a beautiful illustration of the figure of speech called भाविक or the vision. It is defined as प्रत्यक्षा इव यद्भावाः क्रियन्ते भूतभाविनः—where things past or future are represented as existing or happening before our very eyes. This अलंकार has प्रसाद as its stronghold. In Kādambarī lucidity is completely attained.

It will thus be seen that technically speaking, Bāṇa's style possesses all the three गुण or qualities.) This work is regarded as the finest specimen of पाञ्चाली style.

Bāṇa is mainly a prose writer. His two great works कादम्बरी and हर्षचरितम् bear testimony for this. He has also tried his hand at poetry and successfully too. The introductory stanza in both of his works are full of limpid flow.

He makes abundant use of several figures of speech the more prominent among them being श्लेष or paranomasia, उपमा or simile, उत्प्रेक्षा or Poetic fancy and परिसंख्या or exclusion. Instances of these are not far to seek for they are so profusely scattered that he who runs may find them. His pointed reference to history or mythology is another significant feature of his style. He varies the length of his sentences and paragraphs and thus makes his works ever fresh. A lengthy description is almost always concluded with or followed by small sentences which abound in rhythm, paranomasia, flow, antithesis. His keen insight and power of observation are seen everywhere in his works. His accurate knowledge of geography, medicine, astrology, politics and of current superstitions and fables helps to impress his readers. He never works in a slipshod manner. He is painstaking and methodic, at times meticulous.) He has a keen observation of the more commonplace sides of human life e.g. जाबालीभाश्रम, महाश्वेता's abode, the राजकुल of तारापीठ. The advice of minister Śukanāsa to young Chandrāpīḍa on the eve of the latter's coronation as 'Heir-apparent' is an excellent illustration of the author's knowledge of human nature. The eternal words of Śukanāsa, his views on life and wealth, are such that they should be poured into the ears of every youth. It is a message of the author to humanity. It is a masterly review of the dangers to which, not only Chandrāpīḍa, but anyone in an exalted position is necessarily exposed !

Kādambarī is written in the style of fairy romance on account of a series of narratives mixed up with one another.

(1) Bāṇa tells us that there was a king called Śūdraka, (2) the parrot tells the king what he heard (3) Jābālī telling his disciples about a king Tārāpīḍa etc. There are thus stories within stories. There is a world of superhuman beings who change form and are 'born' and 'dead' with unusual frequency. But their emotions, their pains and pleasures, longings and loves are absolutely human. There is softness and sweetness, however, throughout the Kādambarī. Lacote observes—"Le charme de cette œuvre tout imprégnée de tendresse, de mélancolie et d'espérance au une seconde vie" (The Charm of this work overflows with tenderness, with melancholy and with the hope in second life). Winternitz remarks "It must be remarked that the monsters in the form of words (vide Weber's remark above) and the frightful passages are regularly and repeatedly intercepted by quite brief passages in easy and unaffected style. Though the reading of the fiction may be tedious to us it must indeed be granted that for the Indian reader, presuming that he is well-acquainted with Sanskrit, the work has its charms". The students will be interested to know that in a Bengali novel published in 1671, the heroine is represented as reading the Kādambarī of Bāṇa! This shows how popular the work was!

The study of Kādambarī is also interesting on account of numerous allusions to the manners and customs of the time. All rites and devout practices by which the childless Queen Vilāsavati finally obtains a son are enumerated. Chandrāpīḍa's views on the now extinct custom of Satee are also interesting (cf. यदेतदनुमरणं नाम etc. P 50 L. 20 ff.)

(All these things of course do not show that Bāṇa is without blemish. He has his own faults. His main fault is his love for grandiloquence. He is too fond of describing in detail all manner of things. He is at times tiresome. He constantly refers to mythology and this makes the uninitiated reader rather nervous. Bāṇa lacks any sense of proportion. The description of Māhāśvetā, for instance, exhausts the reader's patience who is more anxious to go ahead with the story. Another serious drawback in Bāṇa is his defect in constructive art. The method of 'stories within stories' is cumbersome and confusing as it is always likely to lead the reader to a position where he would miss the thread. It is also too much to imagine a parrot narrating a huge account covering over three hundred pages.) Dr. Peterson observes "The description put into a bird's mouth of Māhāśvetā's hopeless sorrow, or Kādambarī's rising love, is only saved from a suggestion of pathos, by the fact that it needs a conscious effort on the part of the reader to recall who the speaker is. Another defect is that the heroine is introduced too late into the story. "

These defects apart, Bāṇa is the most loved of Sanskrit writers. He is the Cupid to the Goddess of Muse (पञ्चबाणस्तु बाणः). The Kīrtikaunnadī says युक्तं कादम्बरीं श्रुत्वा कवयो मौनमाश्रिताः । बाणध्वनावनध्यायो भवतीति स्मृतिर्यतः ॥ Read also in Śārngadharaṣaddhati—'हृदि लभेन बाणेन यन्मन्दोऽपि पदक्रमः । भवेत् कविकुरङ्गाणां चापलं तत्र कारणम् ॥' A story goes that king Harṣa had bestowed on Bāṇa the title of वश्यवाणीचक्रवर्ती. In the opinion of Peterson "Kādambarī has its place in the world's literature as one more aspiration out of the very heart of genius after that story, which, from the beginning of time, mortal ears have yearned to hear, but which mortal lips have never spoken. "

The following extract of 76 stanzas is a running 'summary' of the plot of Kādambarī. It is only a skeleton of the plot without any poetic merits but is of much use in knowing the plot.

TRANSLATION

On seeing (the lake) (Chandrāpīḍa) whose exhaustion disappeared at the mere sight (of the lake) mused thus—" My pursuit of the Kinnara Couple, although futile (as it could not be captured) has indeed, borne its fruit inasmuch as I have got a view of this lake. To-day, my eyes have achieved in fulness their reward viz. the sight of this lake. The very limit of loveliness has, indeed, been seen ; the culminating point of all that gladdens witnessed ; the farthest boundary line of all that is attractive gazed ; the end of all joy-producing things visualised and the termination of all sight-worthy objects has been described. Having once created the water of this lake the Creator in creating ambrosia has, as though, rendered his own creation tautologous : for, indeed, this (lake-water) like nectar, is capable of delighting all the senses ; it gladdens the eye owing to its extreme clarity ; its coolness yields the pleasure of touch : it gratifies the sense of smell on account of the fragrance of its lotuses : it offers delight to the ear owing to the murmuring swans while by its sweetness it pleases the taste. Indeed, Lord Śiva (the consort of Umā) ever eager for its sight, does not give up his attachment for his abode on the Kailāsa mountain. Since Lord Viṣṇu (the discus-wielder) rejecting this lake with its water sweet like ambrosial juice, prefers to sleep in the ocean, the water of which is saline and hard, it seems he does not wish to fulfil his (proverbial) longing for a watery couch. Since the Earth (the Supporter of all beings) afraid of the blows of the Boar's tusks at the time of the Universal destruction threw herself (for protection) into the ocean, the entire water of which Agastya finished up by drinking, it appears that this lake was not in existence in the beginning (of the world) ; for had She plunged herself into this huge lake, the water of which is as deep as the chain of unfathomable subterranean worlds, She would not have been traced even by thousands of Primordial Boars, much less by one. Maybe, it is from this (lake) that the Doomsday clouds, repeatedly absorbing drops of water, flood, at the times of Universal Destructions, the cavities of the worlds, darkening all the ten quarters with the devastating storms. Methinks that the world which in the remote beginning had the shape of Brahma's Egg and which, prior to the creation, had a watery form, now stands contracted in the form of this lake."

Reflecting thus he dismounted from the horse, having reached its southern bank which mostly consisted of particles of sand rugged like fragments of stone; which had innumerable, pretty, phallus-shaped (लिङ्ग) sand-images (of Śiva), worshipped by the *Vidyādhara*s with multitudes of lotuses plucked along with their stems; which looked charming with red lotuses scattered about along with the holy water offered by Arundhatī (in honour of the Sun); where the sun-shine was enjoyed by mermaids (जलमानुष) sitting upon the adjoining rocks; which, on account of its proximity to the Kailāsa mountain, was marked by the foot-prints of Divine Mothers (मातृ) come there for ablutions; where the act of besmearing the body (indulged in) by Śiva's hosts after their bath, was suggested by the ashes strewn about; which was wet with the flow of ichor oozing from the expansive temple of Gaṇapati entering (the lake) for a bath and where the foot-marks of huge dimensions betrayed the trail of the descent of the thirsty lion of Kūtyāyani (Pūrvatī). He dismounted and took off Indrāyudha's saddle. When (Indrāyudha) got up after rolling on the ground (for a while) and ate a few mouthfuls of grass, (Chandrāpīḍa) escorted him (upto the lake) and let him drink water and bathe at his (horse's) pleasure: (subsequently) bringing him out and removing his bridle, he tied his foot to a lower branch of a tree growing hard by, with a golden chain clasped in his hand and scattered before him a few shoots of Durvā grass growing on the bank of the lake, having cut them with his knife: then he himself entered the lake. He washed his hands; sipped water like the Chātaka bird; tasted bits of lotus fibres like the Chakravāka; touched the red lotuses with his fingers (कराग्रैः) like the moon (that also touches them with the tips of her rays); received with delight the gentle breezes blowing from over the ripples, like the snake (that also loves breezes); placed on his chest petals of lotuses as coverings, like a person afflicted with the strokes of Cupid's (अनङ्ग) shafts; decked his hands (कर) with a blue lotus (पुष्कर) wet with water, like a wild elephant [whose trunk is also adorned with a tip (पुष्कर) wet with spray] : and (finally) came out of the water. Then, on a slab of stone with a bower of creepers overhanging, he arranged a bed with fibrous lotus-leaves which were cool because they were recently cut and on which had gathered drops of water and rolling his upper garment into a pillow underneath his head, he reclined. After a brief respite, there came to his ears a sound of divine music, charming to the ears, blended with the vibrations from the strings of a lute, proceeding from the northern bank of the lake—(The sound) which was first noticed by Indrāyudha who, on hearing it, let fall the mouthful of grass (he was ruminating) and who with ear-tips motionless, neck upraised, turned towards the direction of the sound. On hearing it (Chandrāpīḍa) got up from his bed of lotus-leaves, out of curiosity to know as to how such music could be possible in a place untrodden by mortals, and directed his vision towards the quarter indicated by the notes of the music. But the place being far too away, he could perceive nothing, though he struggled hard to see, stretching his eyes with great exertion. The sound of the music, however, fell upon his ears without a break. Prompted by the curiosity and desirous of knowing the source of the music, he decided to travel, saddled and mounted Indrāyudha, the philharmonic wild deer, starting ahead, showing him the path, even though unasked; keeping the sound of the music as his destination, he set out by the line of trees, lying along the western bank of the lake; (line) charged with the fragrance of the dancing flowers of the सप्तच्छद, बकुल, एला, लवंग and लवली creepers, resounding with the buzzing of the swarm of bees, darkened by the trees and (therefore) looking like a streak of rut of the guardian-elephants (दिङ्नाग).

As he went (Chandrāpīḍa) was greeted by the delightful, holy Kailāsa breezes, blowing towards him, languid owing to a number of watery particles (absorbed) from transparent brooks, shattering the barks of birch trees loaded with bits of foam from the rumination of Śiva's bull (धूर्जटिवृष), kissing the crest of Kārtikeya's peacock (षण्मुखशिखण्डी), grown impertinent as they shook the shoots of Pārvatī's (अम्बिका) ear-ornament, that had the ardent passion for tossing the ear-lotuses of maidens of the Uttarakurus, slightly shaking the kakkola trees, shedding the pollen of the Nameru blossoms, and left after being drunk by Vāsuki distressed as he was tied by Śiva (पशुपति) around his matted hair. On the Western bank of the lake, at the foot of the Kailāsa (range) called Chandraprabha which illumined the region around with its splendour as pure as moon-shine, he perceived, when he reached the spot, a shrine, dedicated to Śiva, and situate on the surface of the earth and engirt on all sides by trees green like emeralds, delightful on account of the chirping of charming Hārītas, having hard buds perforated by hovering big bees with their sharp claws ; wherein the tender shoots of the mango trees (सहकार) were being bitten off by flocks of intoxicated cuckoos ; wherein the full-blown mango-blossoms were ringing with swarms of fervent bees, with sprouts of pepper-shrubs pierced by fearless partridges ; with the fruit of long pepper eaten up by Kapīñjālas tawny with the mass of Champaka pollen ; where sparrows were born in the nests built amidst thickly growing pomegranate trees bending under the load of fruit, the leaves of palm-trees in which were shaken when struck by the herds of sportive and sprightly monkeys with their palms, the flowers whereof were dropped down being struck with the edges of the wings by the pigeons enraged in mutual quarrels ; the tops of which were occupied by starlings tinged with the heap of floral pollen ; which were laden with fruits with bits broken off by hundreds of parrots with the tips of their beaks and nails ; wherein the Tamāla groves were ringing with the notes of the innocent chūtaka birds baffled in their longing for the water from the clouds ; wherein the coils of Lavali creepers were tossed to and fro as the young elephants bit their foliage ; the bunches of flowers of which were strewn about when touched with their wings by the lurking pigeons passionate on account of their fresh youth ; which were fanned by the delicate banana leaves shaken by gentle breeze ; with groves of cocoanut trees drooping with thick clusters of fruit (cocoanuts) ; encircled by betel-nut trees having undeveloped (tender) leaves ; where birds fearlessly bored through the bunches of date palms with their beaks ; the space between which was resounding with the sweet cries of intoxicated and (therefore) noisy pea-hens ; bristling with multitudes of buds growing around ; where, at intervals, the streamlets from the Kailāsa mountain watered the sandy soil at their roots ; which were full of multitudes of extremely tender shoots that resembled groups of palms of Sylvan deities ; on which were, as though, sprinkled drops of alaktaka dye ; the roots of which were frequented by flocks of chamaris enraptured with the chewing of Granthiparna trees ; which mostly abounded in camphor and aloe (अगुरु) trees ; which were densely planted like rainbows (that also depend on clouds) ; the interiors of which were cool as the solar rays were prevented from penetrating through them (and which were therefore) like red lotuses (which also have cool interiors as they prevent the rays of the Sun from entering them) ; the borders of which were encircled by reeds (नल) dark as collyrium, like the armies of Rāma (दाशरथि) the battalions of which were manned by Mūruti (आबुजन) Nila and Nala; which were crowded by monkeys, like mansions (where doves often take their resorts); which had Vetra and Asana trees near about, like ascetics dwelling in their homes (having cane seats near-by); which were entwined with piper-betel creepers, like the Rudras (with their loins engirt with creeper like serpents); which had clusters of shoots and sprouts very closely put forth, like the sand-shore of the ocean (closely spread with clusters of Coral creepers); which were full of all plants, flowers, fruits and sprouts, like the holy water of consecration (which is also full of सर्वौषधि etc.); which were adorned with hundreds of birds having multi-coloured wings, like art-galleries (which are also decorated) with paintings of hundreds of birds with wings in different colours); which were frequented by sky-larks (भारद्वाज), like the Kurus (enlightened by the Brāhmaṇa Droṇa-भारद्वाज द्विज); where bees were enticed by the Punnāga trees as at the great battle fronts (arrows are discharged by mighty warriors); which touched the surface at their roots with the hanging tendrils, like lordly elephants (touching the ground with their dangling and shaggy tails); which were bordered with many bushes, like vigilant monarchs (guarding their frontiers with many garrisons); which were enveloped by swarms of bees serving as armours, like armoured soldiers (दंशितैः) (with bodies covered with steel-frames resembling swarms of bees); where the apes touched the guñjā fruit with their fingers as do the persons about to weigh (gold or silver, touch the guñjā berries with their fingers); the surface underneath which was marked with the foot-prints of lions, like royal couches (having feet like those of lions); which were encircled by multitudes of peacocks with their crests lifted aloft, like ascetics embarked on the performance of the (पञ्चतपस्) (fires with flames rising upward); against which the bespeckled antelopes had rubbed their horns, even as the persons initiated (for a sacrifice cleanse their bodies with the horns of the spotted deer); which had fibres and basins around (for holding water), like aged family ascetics (surrounded by groups of matted children) and which arrested the eye, like mesmerists (dispossessing others of their visions).

(Chandrāpīḍa) white with the pollen of the ketaki-flowers falling (on his body), as it was tossed by the wind (and therefore), as if, made to observe perforce the भस्मव्रत (the vow of besmearing the body with the holy ashes) (or), as though, favoured by the merit of the very entrance into the (holy) sanctuary, entered (the temple) with a view to pay homage (दर्शन) to Śiva and saw (the image of) the four faced Lord Śiva (चतुर्भुज) located on the ground in a small crystal pavilion (supported by) four pillars; worshipped with white lotuses from the Ganges (lotuses) that were very wet because they were plucked afresh, that, as though, resembled the pieces of the Moon's orb cut upwards as drops of water percolated through, the edges of their petals, that seemed, as if, they were the parts of His (Śiva's) boisterous laughter, that looked like fragments of Śeṣa's hoods, that were, as though, the uterine brothers of Pāṇchajanya (conch of Viṣṇu), that were, as if, moulded like the heart of the milky ocean and that produced the illusion of pearly crowns; (Śiva) whose image was fashioned out of an immaculate pearl-stone; whose feet are adored by all the three worlds and who was the controller of both the moveables and immovables.

There he saw a maiden, sitting in the posture called ब्रह्मासन, facing the southern image of the (deity). She, as though, transformed the region together with the mountains and woods into a mass of ivory by the flow of her far-reaching (अतिविस्तारिणी) bodily radiance that inundated all the quarters, white like the foods of the milky ocean over-flooded at the time of final Deluge, that was, as though, a heap of penance, accumulated for a long time, spreading all round and that, resembling as it was the stream of the Ganges, as though, flew in a mass through the interstices between the trees. She, as though, whitened over again the Kailāsa mountain. She would, as though, whiten (or enlighten) the mind of even an onlooker (by her lustre) that would enter (him viz. the beholder) by the passage through his eyes. Her form being environed with an extremely white lustre, her features could not be distinctly scanned, as she appeared, as though, sitting inside a crystal mansion, (or) plunged in the ocean of milk, (or) screened by a very white silken garment, (or) reflected inside a mirror, (or) veiled by a mass of autumnal clouds. She was, as if, produced out of the quality 'whiteness' alone, leaving aside the aggregate of materials necessary for fashioning a (human) body viz. the substances composed of the five primary elements. She had resorted to the worship of Śiva (as though) through fear of being seized by hair by a gang of uncouth persons, like Dakṣa's Sacrificial Rite (incarnate) (which had also submitted Herself to Śiva through fear of being molested by his impudent followers); she had accepted the worship of Lord Śiva for propitiating Him for (the annihilation of the pangs caused by) the smearing Passion, like Rati (who too honoured Śiva for the favour of enlivening the body of Madana); she was drawn (hitherwards) through her longing (to see) Hara's crescent moon familiar to her owing to the common abode, like Lakṣmī (the Presiding Deity of the Milky Ocean क्षीरोदधिदेवता who was also attracted through eagerness to see Śiva's Crescent moon with whom She was acquainted on account of her co-residence in the ocean); She had retired into the temple of Śiva being oppressed by the heat of the Sun (lit. through the fear of the Sun in the Sky), like the Moon (resorting to Śiva through fear of स्वर्मानु i. e. Rahu); She had come there of her own accord, contemplating on Śiva eager for covering His body with the skin of an elephant, like the skin of Airāvata (offering itself to Śiva when He longed for the elephant's hide as a covering for His body). She was, as though, the splendour of the smile of Śiva's southern face come out and stationed there (in bodily form), (or) the besmearing Ashes of Rudra incarnate, (or) the impersonation of Moonshine out for the purpose of dissipating the darkness from Śiva's throat, (or) the serenity of Gaurī's mind in a corporeal form, (or) the physical embodiment of the vows undertaken by Kārtikeya in His childhood, (or) the physical splendour of Śiva's Bull, dissociated (from its body). She seemed to be the floral wealth of the trees in the sanctuary, volunteering to worship Śiva, (or) the consummation of Brahma's austerities come to visit this world, (or) the glory of the Progenitors of the First (आदि) Age, relaxing because tired of wandering through the seven worlds, (or) the Vedic Triad (Holy Triad) betaking forest-life in sympathy (mourning) for Piety devastated in (this) Kali Age; (or), the germs to fashion the coming Kṛta age invested with a feminine form, (or) the spiritual wealth of the sages in a physical form, (or) the array of the celestial elephants fallen (on this earth) while speedily marching through the milky way, (or) the splendour of the Kailāsa, fallen down being agitated when Rāvaṇa uplifted (the mountain), (or) the grandeur of the 'white continent' come there through curiosity to see other Islands, (or) the loveliness, of the bloom of the Kāśa flowers eagerly awaiting (the advent of) autumn, (or) the brilliance of Śeṣa's body come there having relinquished the subterranean region, (or) the physical lustre of Balarāma dropping down, being exhausted on account of his (Balarāma's) reeling through the intoxication of wine, (or) a series of bright fortnights (halves of the month) heaped together; on account of whiteness the swan-kind was as though, her co-partner. She had, as though, come out of the essence of Righteousness, (or) she was, as though, carved out of the conch

(or) drawn out of pearls. Her limbs were, as if, moulded out of lotus-fibres. She seemed, as though, fashioned with flakes of ivory, (or) sponged with the brushes of moon-beams, (or) coated with the layers of lime (used) for painting, (or) bleached with masses of ambrosial foam, (or) bathed in streams of quick-silver, (or) polished with molten silver, (or) cut out of the lunar orb, (or) glittering with the lustre of Kuṭaja, Kuṇḍa, Sinduvāra flowers, (or) the farthest limit of the white colour. Her head was sparkling with the matted hair hanging on her shoulders, as though, made of the splendour of the morning rays picked up from the solar disc kissing the top of the rising mountain, as tawny as the flickering light of the flashing lightening and which with the water-drops peeping at intervals on account of her fresh bath, as though, seemed to be tinged with the particles of ashes from Śiva's feet, at the time of her obeisance (to the Lord). She bore, on her head, the bejewelled feet of Śiva, fastened with (her) matted tresses, having the (Lord's) Name engraved (on them). Her broad forehead was marked with ashes as pure as the dust of the Constellations pulverised by the hoofs of the horses of the Sun's chariot. She (therefore) resembled the side of the Himālaya with the crescent moon touching a rock at its top. She was worshipping Śiva with her gaze that was adorned with profound devotion and that, fixed as it was, on the Linga, as though, appeared to be another string of lotuses. She was, as if, over again, bathing the Lord with the extremely pellucid rays proceeding from her mouth with the lower lip throbbing owing to ceaseless music, (the rays) that were, as though, the radiance of her serene heart, (or) the excellence of her song, (or) the musical notes, (or) the words of her panegyric in a bodily form. She had put on, round her neck, a rosary of very big (lit. as big as the आमलक fruit) and brilliant pearls that, as though, represented the sense of the Vedas extracted from (the mouth of) Brahmā Himself, (or) the syllables of the (Holy) Gāyatrī strung together, (or) the seeds collected from the lotus of Viṣṇu's navel, (or) the Seven Sages come there, assuming the form of stars with the desire of purifying themselves by the touch of her hand. She (therefore) seemed to be the Full-Moon-Night with the Moon's orb encircled with a halo. On account of her bosoms spherical in shape like the skull on Śiva's head with the face pointing downwards and as lovely as the pitchers at the entrance to Mokṣa (Salvation), she, as if, looked like the river Ganges with a lone pair of swans

(sporting in its water). In her case the bark-garment of a branch of the desire-yielding tree (कल्पतरु)—(the garment) which was, as though, made of the mane of Gauri's lion, as attractive as a chowrie and the knot of which was tied between her bosoms,—served the purpose of an upper vestment. Her person was purified by the sacred thread which went around (her shoulder) and which was, as if, a pencil of rays of the moon the crest-jewel (of Śiva), received as a favour from the Lord (अयुग्मलोचन). Her hips were covered with a silken garment reaching as far as (her) feet and which, though naturally white, was reddened as it came in contact with the splendour of the soles of (her) feet, pointing upwards in the Brahmāsana posture. She was attended upon even by innocent and well-restrained youth that approached her in due course, as by (guileless and unassuming) disciple (approaching his teacher at the proper time), (or) patronized also by pure gracefulness as by a holy person (of a pure heart), (or) waited upon even by Beauty with charming eyes and calm mind as by a domesticated deer (having an attractive gaze and free from restiveness). With her right hand the fingers of which were adorned with ringlets of pieces of fine shell, which looked fair owing to the ashes sticking to it after the Tripunḍraka mark, to the forearm of which pieces of conch were fastened and which, bristling that it was with the brilliance of the nails, was, as though, holding a fiddle stick of ivory, she was striking a lute made of ivory and placed on her lap like her daughter. She was, as though, the corporeal representative of the Science of Music and was furnished with her own images with lutes in hand—(images) which were mirrored in the pillars of the bejewelled Maṇḍapikā and which were, as if, (her) companions worthy of herself. As she was reflected in the image of Śiva that was wet because it was recently bathed, she seemed to have entered the heart of Śiva propitiated through fervent devotion. She was singing in honour of Lord Śiva, a panegyric which was, as though, a necklace of pearls (embracing the neck) because it was produced in the throat, (or) a series of planets (associated with the Polar Star) because it had a refrain, (or) an angry woman (having a red face) because it was sung in impassioned notes, (or) an intoxicated lady (with eyes dull and pupils moving about) because the Crescendo and the Decrescendo were often repeated, (or) a woman in hysteria (beating her hands ever and anon) as the harmony was maintained in various ways, (or) Mimāṃsā (possessing many Bhāvanās) as it was teemed with many a mode of melody. The sound of her lute, harmonised with the music of (her) song, was listened to by the deer, the boar, the ape, the elephant, the lion and other wild animals drawn by the very sweet melody of the song, completely absorbed (in it) (lit. as if practising meditation) and sitting in a circle (around her) with the flaps of the ears motionless. She was, as though, the Celestial River descended from heaven, (or) refined even as the speech of the "Initiated", (or) dazzling as the rod of the arrow of (Śiva) the destroyer of the three (demoniacal) cities, (or) free from craving (of passions), like one who had tasted nectar (having lost thirst for water), (or) absolutely unattached (to worldly objects), like the Crescent Moon on Hara's head (free from redness), (or) pleased like the wealth of the unagitated waters of the unchurned ocean, (or) uninfluenced by the Pairs (of opposite qualities) like the graceful style (in dramatic composition) (free from compounds), (or) independent like the cognition of the Buddhas (having no substrate). She had found her way to 'Self-Realisation', like Sitā (who entered fire); she had subdued her Self (lit. senses and the mind), like a woman adept in the art of gambling (who masters the tricks of the gambler's trade). She subsisted on water, like the Earth (nursed on water); absorbed the solar heat, like the splendour of wintry morns, (that also completely subdues the heat of the Sun), possessed (only) the ascetics' wealth, like the Metre (containing only a fixed number of Mātrās appropriate for the caesura and the Gaṇas) (and) was motionless, like one painted in a picture. She enveloped the surface with (her) physical lustre (to show) as if she were made of rays. She was unattached, unconceited, free from jealousy, of a form celestial and observing the vow of a devotee of Śiva. Although her age could not be reckoned on account of her divinity, she seemed to be (a maiden) of about eighteen winters.

Then, dismounting (from the horse) and tying it to a branch of a tree (Chandrāpīḍa) approaching (reverentially), devoutly bowed to the venerable Śiva and once again scanned the celestial maiden with an unwinking and steadfast gaze. Being amazed at (her) personal charm, splendour and serenity, he reflected, "Indeed, in this world, many (unexpected) incidents befall a (human) being, which come to him (and yet) remain unaccounted for. While aimlessly and wantonly hunting after the pair of Kinnaras, I saw this delightful region untrodden by human beings and fit for the movements of the celestial beings (only). When searching for water, I espied a charming lake the water of which seems to be meant for the Siddhas. While I was relaxing on its bank, an unearthly music fell upon my ears. As I followed it, this heavenly damsel inaccessible to humanity, came within my purview. I have no doubts as regards her celestial origin. Her form surely compels one to infer her being super-human ; (otherwise) whence could there be the possibility of extraordinary musical notes of this type on regions earthly? So, if she would not suddenly vanish from my sight, (or) would not ascend the summit of the Kailāsa or fly up into the air, I would approach her and ask her all this as to "who she is, what her name is and what for she has accepted this vow (even) while young. Oh! How many great wonders are stored in this place," with this resolve, he sat reclining against another pillar of the crystal pavilion, awaiting the time of the finale of the music.

When at the close of (her) music the notes of her lute had stopped, the maiden like a lotus plant at the cessation of the sweet buzzing of the bees, got up, circumambulated, prostrated before Hara and turning round, addressed Chandrāpīḍa, as though, cheering him, touching him with merit, sprinkling him with holy water, purifying him with austerities, purging him of all impurities, blessing him with boons (or) consecrating him with her gaze that was innately pure and confident owing to the power of her austerities, "Welcome to thee, my guest! How could Your Honour reach this region? Please, get up, come with me and be gracious enough to accept my hospitality". When (Chandrāpīḍa) was thus addressed (by her), he thought himself honoured by her very speech; he got up, respectfully returned her salutation and humbly followed her like a disciple, saying, "As your Ladyship commands". On his way he thought, "What a great luck that she has not disappeared on seeing me. Curiosity, indeed, prompts me to question her. Since this confidence produced (in her about me) is revealed through (her) exceedingly affable demeanour, though she possesses a heavenly form rare among the ascetics, I hope that she would certainly acquaint me with the whole of her story if urged by me". Having resolved thus, he walked just a hundred steps and saw a cavern. Its entrance was darkened by thick Tamāla trees that produced (the illusion) of the night-time even by day: the region upto its borders was resounding with the humming of intoxicated bees buzzing in a low pitch over the bowers of creepers with flowers in full bloom. There, the cascades of water falling from a great height and foaming, rebounded as they struck against the surface of white rocks and produced a great noise (as the cascades were) torn up (into many streams) by the tops of the rocks with (sharp) up-turned edges, showering sprays cool like snow, scattered about to create mist all around. On account of the springs on both the sides and white like a garland of snow-flakes and (also like) the Laughter of Lord Śiva, it (the cave), as though, appeared equipped with moving chowries suspended at the portals. It had inside it a huge jewelled Kamaṇḍalu, a Yogapattikā hanging on one side and a pair of white sandals made of the bark of cocoanuts, placed on the top of a peg. A part of it (the cave) was occupied by a bark-bed dusty with the holy ashes strewn about. It (the cave) contained a begging bowl (made) of Conch-shell, and appearing, as though, it was the Lunar disc carved out with a chisel and a gourd-vessel for (storing) ashes. When (Chandrāpīḍa) took his seat on a slab of stone at its entrance, the maiden placed the lute at the top of the bark-bed and took water in a leafy cup from a spring in order to honour him. She approached, when Chandrāpīḍa addressed her thus, "Your Ladyship, enough of this great restraint. Enough of this politeness. Away with this great courtesy. Even a casual sight of yours would dispel all sin and would be a means of purification, like the 'Sin-destroying' prayer, (अघमर्षण). Pray, take your seat." Yet pressed by her, he accepted her hospitality with his head bent down in respect.

With the ceremony of reception over, (the maiden) took her seat on another stone and after a few moments' silence implored Chandrāpīḍa (to narrate his account). He (too) recounted the incidents beginning with his triumphal march and leading to his arrival there as a result of the pursuit of the pair of the Kinnaras. When the maiden heard all the account, she got up and taking her begging bowl moved around under the trees in the temple yard. Presently was her begging bowl filled with fruits fallen of themselves. Returning, she urged Chandrāpīḍa to partake of those fruits. It (then) occurred to him, "Nothing can be inaccessible to the ascetics. What greater wonder could there be than this that even the non-sentient trees yield to Her Holiness their fruits like conscious beings and thus honour themselves! So strange a thing as this was never seen by me before." Thus, amazed all the more, Chandrāpīḍa got up, brought Indrāyudha to that place, and removing his saddle, he tied him nearby, took his bath in the water of the spring, feasted on the fruits that had the flavour of nectar, sipped the spring-water as cool as snow, washed (his hands) and retired in a lonely corner while the damsel also did justice to her grubs consisting of water, fruits and roots.

When she finished her meals, concluded her evening rites and was resting at ease on a slab of stone, Chandrāpīḍa quietly moved towards her, took his seat nearby and after a brief silence politely addressed her, "Your Ladyship, Frivolity the (invariable) attendant of humanity, rendering (me all the more) anxious through curiosity increased all the more by the acquisition of your favour, urges me to ask you, although I am reluctant (to do so). Even the slightest favour of the Exalted emboldens the fickle-minded. Even a very brief period of association at one and the same time, engenders acquaintance. Even a slight acceptance of courtesy produces affection. So, if it would not cause much embarrassment to you, I wish to be favoured by your narrative. Since I met Your Ladyship, I have a very great curiosity concerning this matter. Which of the family of the Gods, (or) the Gandharvas, (or) the Guhyakas, (or) the Apsarases, has been honoured by your Ladyship, with your birth? Why have you renounced the worldly life in so tender an age? What a great disparity between your age, beautiful form, astonishing loveliness (on the one hand) and this restraint of the senses (on the other)! All this appears to me to be prodigious indeed! Why have you given up the celestial abode crowded with many a Siddha and Sādhya easily approachable (while) in heaven, to resort to this deserted wilderness all alone? How strange indeed is all this that your body composed of the very five elements, should radiate lustre. It is unseen and unheard of before. Pray, satisfy my curiosity. Will you please narrate the whole account? At the end of this (appeal), she, brooding over something, was speechless for a moment, sighed and sobbed mutely, with eyes half closed, shedding very huge and bright tears which rushed out having, as though, received the sanctity of her heart, (or) spread the tranquillity of her senses, (or) exuded the fluid-essence of her penance, (or) poured the molten whiteness of (her) eyes. They oozed over (her) spotless cheeks, dripping down in quick succession, like the pearls of a broken necklace. The tear-drops formed a regular chain and were broken into a spray (when they reached) the upper part of her bosoms covered with the bark-garment.

Seeing her weep, Chandrāpīḍa thought that very moment, "Irresistible indeed, is the swoop of calamities since they (calamities) overpower even such forms undeserving (of such a treatment). Indeed, no embodied soul ever escapes the visits of misfortunes! The operation of the 'pairs' (द्वन्द्व) is strong indeed! Besides, these tears of hers have, indeed, greatly increased my curiosity. Such (eminent) personalities are never subdued by trifling causes of grief. The Earth would never shake by the impact of such paltry shocks. Though his curiosity was thus increased, he looked upon himself as an offender since it was he who reminded her of her grief. He got up and fetched water in the cavity of his hands from the spring so that she should wash her face. Out of regard for him, she washed her eyes that had become slightly red, wiped her face with the end of her garment, sighed heavily and replied in a low tone, though the tears were falling without a break, "Oh Prince, why need you hear the unworthy (of hearing) account of renunciation of mine who am extremely hard-hearted, unfortunate and accursed right from my birth and sinful (throughout) my life. If, however, you are too eager (to listen) pray, hearken.

Probably, Your Honour of noble disposition must have heard that there are maidens called Apsarases (residing) in the abode of Gods (heaven). Of these there are fourteen families. One has sprung from the mind of Lord Brahmā (कमलयोगिनि), another from the Vedas, another from Fire, another from Vāyu, another from the Nectar while it was being churned, the next from the rays of the Sun, the next from the rays of the Moon, another from the Earth, the next from Lightning, the next from Death, another from Cupid and their last two families were sprung along with the Gandharvas from Muni and Ariṣṭā, the two of the many daughters of Dakṣa Prajāpati. Thus, these make in all the fourteen families. As for the Gandharvas, they were also divided into two branches already referred to, being born of the two daughters of Dakṣa. Chitraratha, who excelled his fifteen brothers Chitrāsena and others in qualities, was the sixteenth son of Muni. It is reported that he, with his valour broadcast in all three worlds and his prowess augmented all the more by the appellation 'Friend' (conferred on him) by Indra (आखण्डल) whose lotus-like feet are caressed by the garlands on the heads of all the Gods, earned, even in his childhood, the paramountcy of all the Gandharvas with (the power of) his arms darkened with the mass of rays of his beautiful sword. To the north of Bharatavarṣa, not very far from this place, lies, in the neighbouring country 'Kimpuruṣa', his residence viz. the 'Dividing Mountain' 'Hemakūṭa.' There live thousands of Gandharvas, enjoying his protection (lit. protected by the pair of his arms). It is he who planted this extremely attractive grove 'Chitraratha' by name and by his order this expansive lake named 'Acchoda' has been dug out. (This image of) Lord Śiva (the consort of Bhauvāni-Pārvatī) has been installed by him (in this temple). The illustrious Gandharva Hamsa, the son of Ariṣṭā and the eldest of the six brothers Tumburu and others, was enthroned, while yet a boy, as the king of the other branch of the Gandharvas, by Chitraratha, the emperor of the Gandharvas. He (Hamsa) resides on that very mountain, being attended upon by a countless army of the Gandharvas. In the family of the Gandharvas which had been spoken of above as having been sprung from the rays of the Moon, was born a maiden named Gaurī of charms pleasing to the eyes of the three worlds and a complexion as serene as the rays of the Moon. She was, as though, fashioned from the entire grace of all the digits of the Moon, (grace) that was carried along the current of the rays. She was, as if, a second Gaurī (Pārvatī). Hamsa, the Lord of the other Gandharva family, wooed her as does the ocean the river Ganges. She, united with His Honour Hamsa, as Ratī with Madana or the Lotus-plant with the Autumn, derived great delight from this fitting union. She became the head of the whole of his Zenana.

To this well-matched exalted couple I was born as the only daughter of this nature, (so) unpropitious, destined to suffer grief and the abode of manifold miseries. My father being childless (till then), welcomed my birth with a great festivity that excelled even (one on the occasion of) the birth of a son. On the tenth day he performed all the wonted rites and christened me, quite significantly, as Mahāśvetā. Like a lute (producing sweet and indistinct notes), I, murmuring sweet and indistinct chatterings of a baby, was carried (even like the lute) from arm to arm (lit. from 'lap to lap) by the Gandharvas in my father's palace, where I passed my childhood pleasing because I did not know the hardships of love and grief. In due course (however) budding youth approached me, as does the month of Chaitra the Vernal Season, (or) the tender shoots the month of Chaitra, (or) the blossoms the delicate leaves, (or) the bees the flowers, (or) the intoxication the bees.

In the days of Chaitra the beds of fresh lotuses were expanding; the unripened mango-blossoms made the gallants uneasy; the advent of the gentle Malaya-breezes made Cupid's banner-cloth flutter ; the Bakula trees began to put forth buds (lit. bristled), being sprinkled with the mouthfuls of wine by the intoxicated damsels ; the buds of the Kāleyaka flowers were darkened with stains in the form of swarms of bees. The days, then, were resounding a thousand times with the jingle of the bejewelled anklets ringing as the ladies kicked the Aśoka trees : the mango trees looked lovely owing to the sweet buzzing of the swarms of bees crowding together, (being drawn) by the fragrance of blooming blossoms ; the surface was whitened by the sand-bank in the form of the dense pollen of flowers ; the host of bees vexed with the intoxication of honey, moved the swings in the form of creepers. There was a violent shower due to the sprays of honey tossed up by frenzied cuckoos lurking behind the Lavali creepers in foliage ; the paths were wet with the blood of the hearts of way-farers, broken with the fear (created) by the twangle of the bow drawn by Madana pleased with the offerings of the lives of the wives of men sojourning afar ; the quarters were deafened with the hissing sound produced by the feathers of the incessantly falling arrows of Madana. There were to be seen, even by day, rows of Abhisārikas blinded by the passion of love of which their hearts were possessed. The tide of the ocean of the exuberant Passion had flooded the days which enraptured the hearts of all the people. Then, once with my mother, I came to bathe in this lake having its beauty enhanced in spring and its lilies, and red, blue and white lotuses in full bloom. Here, on the rocks of the bank, were carved, by Pārvatī, when she had come (there) for her bath, images of Tryambaka with Bhrīgin and Rīti, where the obeisance and circumambulation of the sages could be inferred from the tiny foot-prints left in the dust—these I adored. Being urged by (lit. with my heart full of) the desire to survey the cool and very lovely region, I strolled about with my friend, musing, “ How charming is this arbour of creepers with the clusters of flowers having filaments broken up and their inside yielding to the weight of bees ! Here stands a mango tree in full blossoms with streams of honey oozing from the holes in the stalks of its buds pierced by the cuckoos with the tips of their claws ! How cool, indeed, is this avenue of sandal trees deserted by the snakes frightened at the low murmur of the hosts of fervent peacocks ! This swing in the form of creepers looks really attractive as the bunches of full-blown flowers fallen down suggest the swinging of the Sylvan Deities. Pleasant, indeed, is the surface beneath the trees on the bank, where the Kalahamsas have left the marks of their steps stamped on the mass of thick pollen of flowers " !

At another place I scented the fragrance of a flower, quickly borne by the forest-breeze, unexperienced heretofore and fit for Divine beings only. It drew near eclipsing the fragrance of the rest of the flowers, although the forest was in full bloom. On account of its extreme sweetness it, as though, anointed, satisfied and filled the sense of smell. It was followed by the bees in their rivalry to own it. Being eager to know as to whence could it have come and being drawn, like a bee, by the fragrance of the flower, I went a few paces with eyes half-closed attracting (behind me) the Kalahamsas in the lake, by the jingling of the bejewelled anklets resounding all the more (than before) due to my (gait) tremulous through curiosity. There, I beheld a very charming ascetic-youth who had come there for his ablutions. He was, as though, the Spring practising penance, being distressed through grief for Madana consumed in the fire from (the eye of) Hara, (or) the (digit of the) Moon on Śiva's head, observing a vow for the acquisition of the full disc, (or) Cupid pursuing (religious) observances to propitiate Śiva. On account of his great radiance he appeared, as if, encaged by the flashing streaks of lightning, (or) diving into the heart of the Sun's disc on a summer-day, (or) standing in the midst of the flames of fire. With his physical lustre yellowish like the light of the lamp, gleaming forth ever more and more, he rendered the (entire) wood tawny and made the region around, as if, it was a mass of gold. His soft and reddish-brown matted hair was like a ribbon rolled in gorochana. With the mark of ashes on (his) forehead, (the mark) resembling the ensign of Holiness and, as if, the line of sandal-paste (applied to the body) to ease the fervent longing for the union with Sarasvati, he, as though, shone like the stream of the Ganges adorned with a thin patch of sand-bank. He looked graceful with a pair of eye-brows that were the arched gate of the abode of the knittings (of the eye-brows) at the time of pronouncing curses. He, as though, wore (on his person) a chaplet of eyes strung together, on account of the elongated form (of the eyes). The deer, as it were, had imparted to him a part of the beauty of their eyes. He had a long and aquiline nose. The passion of budding youth, not finding an access into his heart, had unreservedly reddened his lovely lower lip. In the absence of the growth of beard, his face appeared like a young lotus that had not yet attained the grace of being surrounded by a host of bees. He was adorned with the sacred thread that resembled (either) the string of Cupid's bow rolled into a circle, (or) the fibres of a lotus in the lake of (his) austerities. In one hand he held a pitcher of the shape of a Bakula fruit with stem and in the other a rosary of crystal beads, (the rosary) that was, as though, strung with the tears of Rati weeping through grief over the death of Cupid. He looked beautiful with a deep circular navel that appeared like a whirlpool formed at the confluence of rivers in the form of many Lores. He had on his belly a thin line of hair, as dark as the particles of collyrium and as though representing the path of the exit of the darkness in the form of Delusion dissipated by Enlightenment. His loins were engirt by a Munja Zone that was, as though, the halo taken as a trophy (by him) (lit. owned by him) after vanquishing the sun by his brilliance. In his case the purpose of a vesture was served by the bark of the Mandāra tree, washed in the stream of the Milky Way and as pink as the eyes of an old partridge. He was, as though, the embellishment of Celibacy, (or) the prime of Piety, (or) the grace of Sarasvatī, (or) the self-chosen Lord of all Lores, (or) the rendezvous of all the Vedas. He had a staff (Āṣāḍha), like the Summer (equipped with the month of Āṣāḍha). He was as fair as the first blossoms of the Priyangu, like a winter-wood (shining with the blooming Priyangu blossoms). His face was decked with a mark of ashes as white as flowers, like the month of Chaitra (with the beginning adorned with the exuberance of Tilaka trees white with flowers). Accompanying him was another young sage, (his) equal in age, (a companion) worthy of him and intent on collecting flowers for the worship of deities.

There, I beheld, placed by him (on his ears) as an ornament, a nosegay shedding drops of nectar, unseen heretofore and imitating the cluster of stars (in the constellation) of Pleiads. It was, as though, the refulgent smile of the Sylvan Grace elated at the (first) sight of the Spring, (or) a cavity-ful of the parched grain (offered by) Chaitra to greet the arrival of the Malaya breezes, (or) the youthful amorous sport of the Splendour of flowers, (or) the row of the series of the drops of perspiration of Rati (produced) by the exhaustion due to (the act of) copulation, (or) the hair of the chowrie (serving) as a symbol of the banner on the elephant of Cupid, (or) the Ablisārikā enticing the gallant bees. Convinced that it was the fragrance of this (bouquet) that eclipsed that of the rest of the flowers, I reflected, while scanning.

the ascetic-youth, "Inexhaustible, indeed, is the store of the Creator's implements of producing Beauty par excellence, since, He having (once) fashioned Lord Cupid the affluence of whose beauty is a marvel for the three worlds, has (now) created another Cupid (मकरकेतु) in the guise of this ascetic, the fulness of whose form excels even that of Cupid. I feel that Brahmā, when he was shaping the Moon's Orb, the solace to the eyes of the entire universe and when He was producing the lotuses, the abodes of the sports of Lakṣmī, was but practising (for the acquisition of the necessary) dexterity to fashion the form of this (sage's) face; for otherwise what reason there could possibly be for the creation of similar things. Mendacious indeed, is the belief that all the digits of the Moon waning in the dark half of the month, are absorbed by the Sun with his Suṣūmṇā Ray: all those digits really enter this body (of the sage): otherwise how can there be this comeliness (in the case) of this (sage) who is practising austerities mostly consisting of hardships and (ordinarily) depriving (one) of (his) charms." Even as I was musing thus, the Flowery weaponed God (Love) unmindful of the distinction between the right and the wrong, ever partial to Beauty alone, and easily attainable in budding youth, enslaved me, as does the intoxication of the flowering season the bee.

Although I knew "What an improper, extremely ignominious thing unworthy of a maiden born of a noble family" I, not being the mistress of myself and with all my limbs stupefied on account of the narcosis that set in at that very moment, became, as though, stunned, (or) painted in a picture, (or) seized by some body and on account of some indescribable (feeling) that I knew without being instructed (by anybody)—(a feeling) which is to be known by being realised alone—I looked at him for long with my right eye that had forgotten the act of winking along with the breaths, with eye-lashes half-closed and its inside spotted owing to the pupil all the more tremulous being (continuously) directed to the corner—(looked) as if ardently drinking (him) with eyes, (or) beseeching (him) for something, (or) telling him that I was his vassal, (or) offering ahead my heart, (or) entering (him) with all my soul, (or) striving to become one (with him), (or) submitting (to him for receiving his protection) saying, "Save me, overpowered as I am with (the emotion of) love," (or) entreating him to give me a room in his heart—I don't know how I did it—It is not clear whether I acted on the advice of his lavishing beauty, or my mind, or the God of love, or fresh youth, or my love for him, or in some other way-

Being as though borne near him by senses having been lifted up (by them), (or) propelled from behind by the flower-arrowed God, I with great difficulty controlled my soul that I resigned completely. Thereafter sighs in an unbroken succession came out, as though, to give space to love. The nipples of my bosoms throbbed, as though, with the desire of informing (him) that my heart was full of affection (for him). Bashfulness vanished, as though, washed away by the row of the drops of perspiration. My delicate frame shivered, as though, alarmed at the fall of the host of the penetrating (lit. sharp) darts of Cupid. Being, as though, curious to inspect the excellence of his form, a thrill appeared on my body fervently longing for an embrace. Love entered my heart, as though, entirely washed away from my feet with the water of perspiration.

It occurred to me, "What a disgraceful (lit. improper) thing the abominable God of love has begun in delivering me over to this peaceable (sage) who is far away from all contact with carnal pleasures! So stupid, indeed, is the woman's heart that it is incapable of discerning the fitness of the object of love! How can I reconcile these two—this effulgent abode of splendour and penance and these impulses of love indulged in by the vulgar people! Surely he must be inwardly ridiculing me thus jeered by Cupid. It is a wonder that I conscious of all this, am not able to withhold my feeling. Granted that there have been maidens who abandoning all feeling of shame, moved towards their husbands; there were others still who were intoxicated by this accursed Love but I stand alone (in this respect) inasmuch as my heart perplexed at the mere sight of this (beautiful) form, is so enthralled in a moment. It is the (passage of) time and the virtues (of the person one loves) that make (the influence of) love irresistible at all times. While I am in my senses and while he has not clearly detected the frivolous mischiefs of Passion, it is better to steal away from this place or would he acquaint me with a curse, being enraged at the sight of the effects of love loathed by him! For, the disposition of the sage-kind is easily susceptible to provocation". With this resolve, I wished to retire (from the place) (lit. became eager to go away from the place). Feeling that he belongs to a class that commands the respect of the whole of mankind, I offered him my homage—with the eyes not drawn off from his face (i. e. fixed), the eye-lashes untwinkling, the surface invisible, the resplendent ear-sprout slightly dislodged off the cheeks, the flowery ear-ornament flashing on the disorderly (soft) mass of hair, and the jewelled ear-rings oscillating on the shoulders.

As I offered my salutations (to him) he, losing his firmness at the sight of my emotion, was made restless by passion, as the lamp is made by the wind, owing to the dictates of the ' Mind-born' being inviolable, the vernal month being the inspirer of intoxication, the place being extremely delightful, blooming youth being mostly impolite, the senses being instinctively fitful, the craving for the sensual objects being irresistible, temper being (innately) unsteady, the various incidents being destined to happen—in a word, it being decreed, on account of the wickedness of my misfortune, that I should suffer from such (poignant) tortures (as I am at present enduring). Horripilation appeared on his body also, as though, to receive Love visiting him for the first time. His sighs started ahead (of him), as if, to escort (his) mind that was already on its march towards me. The rosary in his hand seized by tremor, shook, as though, apprehending a break in (his) vow. A net of drops of perspiration was seen adhering to his cheeks, as though, it were another spray of flowers suspended from his ear. (His) eyes expanded through the joy at my sight and with the pupils dilated as though, metamorphosed the region into (a cluster of) lotuses : the masses of (their) far-spreading rays enveloped (all) the ten quarters, as if they were the bed of blooming blue lotuses that were flying up into the sky, relinquishing the Acchoda lake (lit. the water of the Acchoda lake) of their own accord. With his excitement thus strikingly manifest, the sway of Passion (over me) was re-doubled and that very moment I experienced some indescribable state. Methought, " Surely it is that Cupid the teacher who imparts instruction in the elegant amorous movements calling for sexual enjoyment, that is directing these graceful gestures (of the ascetic) : otherwise how can this person not acquainted with such episodes which are charming owing to the presence of the various emotions, possess such a gaze, bright with the eye-brows (ever) active, unsteady with the pupils dull and rolling under the weight of joy, unversed with the movements (of the eye)—(the gaze) which is, as though, showering streams of love's pleasure, (or) shedding nectar, (or) half closed on account of intoxication, (or) languid with exhaustion, (or) heavy with sleep ? Whence comes this great dexterity which communicates the inward longing of the heart through the eye without (the medium of) words ?

Seizing an opportunity, I drew near the other boy-sage, his associate, paid (him my) respects and asked, "Sir what is his name? Of what sage is he (the son)? From which tree is plucked this bouquet of flowers used by him as an ear-decoration? Its spreading fragrance having extraordinary sweetness hitherto unenjoyed, excites great curiosity in me." With a little smile he replied, "Maiden, why need you ask such a question? If at all you are curious, I narrate. Pray listen—

"There dwells as the resident of the heavenly world a great sage Śvetaketu by name, whose reputation is celebrated in all the three worlds and who on account of his nobility, is respected by hosts of the Gods, the demons and the Siddhas (Lit. whose feet are respected etc.). The beauty of His Grace enrapturing the hearts of the nymphs in the celestial as well as the nether worlds and delighting in all the three worlds, outshone (even that of) Nalakūbara. Once, in order to pluck lotuses for the worship of the deities, he went down the heavenly river of streams as white as Śiva's laughter and its water intermixed with hundreds of spots (as on peacock's feathers) on account of the drops of Airāvata's ichor. The goddess Lakṣmī ever attending beds of lotuses and seated on a thousand-petalled blooming lotus, sighted him as he was descending (into the stream). As she looked at him, placing her delicate hand on her mouth languid when she started yawning and as she absorbed (him with eyes) with the eye-brows (ever) active, unsteady with the pupils dull and rolling under the weight of joy, unversed with the movements (of the eye), (the gaze) which was, as though, drinking his beauty with eyes half-closed owing to the intoxication brought on by Passion and with the pupils quivering in the ripples of the tears of joy, her mind was agitated by love. With the pleasure of sexual union accomplished by a mere glance, she achieved her purpose sitting (as she was) on the very lotus. So a son was born (to her). She took him in her arms (Lit. lap) and handed (him viz. the child) over to Śvetaketu saying, "Your holiness, this is your son. Please accept him". He too performed all the (customary) rites proper for a son and named him as Puṇḍarīka as he was born in a lotus. Initiating him into the vow (of celibacy), he made him master the group of all the sciences. This (youth that you see now) is the same Puṇḍarīka.

"And this spray of flowers is of the Pārijāta tree that rose from the milky ocean when churned by the Gods and the Demons. I will also narrate how it found its way to his ear, although it was contrary to his vow. This being the 14th day, he started with me from the celestial world to worship lord Śiva (अम्बिकापति) on the Kailāsa and while passing along the Nandanavana, he was respectfully addressed by its Presiding Diety intoxicated with the drinking of floral wine, as she came out (of the garden)—taking (in her hand) the boquet of the Pārijāta ; (the Diety) was escorted by the Vernal Beauty in person with her tender hand ; She had a girdle made of a wreath of Bakula flowers with her person completely veiled with garlands put around her neck, interspersed with flowers and shoots and reaching as far as her knees ; she wore a fresh mango-shoot as ear-ornament ; “ Be gracious to accept this and favour (it) as an embellishment befitting your person pleasing to the sight of all the three worlds ! Will you please place, on the tip of your ear, this bouquet rude enough to desire the grace of an ear-ornament ? Let the life’s mission of Pārijāta be fulfilled ”. While she was speaking thus, he looked down rather abashed at the compliment to his form and (as such) proceeded along, disregarding her. But when I saw her, following (us), I said, “ Friend, what harm is there ? Please comply with her request ” and placed this per force on his ear in spite of his reluctance. Thus, “ who he is, what this nosegay is and how this came to be placed on the tip of his ear ”—all this has been related (to you) in full ”.

When he had spoken thus, the young sage addressed me with an indication of a little smile (on his face), “ Oh inquisitive maiden, why need you trouble (yourself) with this inquiry ? You may take this if its sweet fragrance appeals to you.” So saying, he approached me and removing (the nosegay) from his ear placed it on mine—(this nosegay) had, as if, begun soliciting for Love’s union with the melodious humming of the swarm of bees. Owing to my yearning for a touch of his hand, there arose, at the very moment, horripilation at the place where the ear-ornament was (to be) placed, as if, it were another blossom of the Pārijāta. (As to him), from his hand, the fingers of which were made to vibrate at the pleasure of the touch of my cheek, slipped, (as though), along with the feeling of shame, the rosary of which he failed to take any cognisance. Before it could reach the ground, I caught it and gracefully placed it as an ornament around my neck where it displayed the elegance of a singular necklace—(I) experiencing, as though, the pleasure of being caught within his arms.

When things had come to such a pass the carrier of (my) umbrella mentioned to me, “ Princess, Her Majesty has finished her bath. The hour of going home is drawing nigh. Therefore, be pleased to take your bath ", Somehow being reluctantly dragged by those words of hers even as a recently trapped female elephant (is made to move) at the first stroke of a goad, I proceeded (thence) to have my bath, withdrawing my gaze from off his face very painfully—(gaze) which was, as though, sunk in the mud of the nectar of his charm, (or) enmeshed in the web of the thorns in the form of bristles on my cheek, (or) nailed with the shafts of Cupid's arrows, (or) stitched with the thread of (his) grace. As I started, the other boy-sage marking that sort of loss of courage (of his companion), exhorted (him) with a slight display of anger out of affection.

"Dear Puṇḍarīka, this is quite unbecoming of you. This is the path beaten by insignificant persons, while the good pride (themselves) on the possession of fortitude. Why don't you control yourself when agitated like an ordinary person ? Whence has this unprecedented sensorial disturbance of thine set in for the first time whereby thou hast been reduced to this plight ? Where have gone (all) that firmness of thine, that subjugation of senses, that mastery over the mind, that tranquil disposition, that vow of celibacy come (to thee) as a heritage, that apathy for all the sensual objects, those precepts of thy teacher, all (thy) learning, those ideas of aversion, that abhorrence of enjoyment, that indifference to happiness, that firm devotion for austerities, that dislike for pleasures and that discipline in youth ! Since, even persons like thee are sullied by attachment to Passions and overwhelmed by follies, (thy) wisdom is, indeed, fruitless (thy) study of the Code of Conduct (धर्मशास्त्र) of no use, (thy) sacrament in vain, (thy) discrimination (following) the teachings of (thy) preceptor null and void, (thy) awakening of no purpose and (thy) knowledge of no avail ! How is it that thou hast failed to notice (thy) rosary slipped from (thy) hand and taken away too ? Oh, how absent-minded thou art ! Why ! It is already carried away ! Now, at least, stop that heart (of thine) that is being stolen away by this wanton girl".

Thus admonished by him, he replied, feigning a little sense of shame, "Dear Kaṣṇjāla, why should you misconstrue my action ? I wouldn't thus tolerate this naughty girl's mischief, viz. the theft of the rosary". So saying, he addressed me, his face (just then) being charming in its feigned ire, decked with a fearful frown assumed with great effort, and with its lower lip throbbing (betraying) an eager desire for a kiss. "You fickle maid ! You shall not move even a step further without returning that rosary". As I heard that, I took off from round my neck the necklace which was, as though, a handful of flowers gracefully offered at the opening of the elegant dance in honour of Cupid and saying, "Your honour, here is your rosary", I placed it in the outstretched hand of him who was absent-minded and whose eyes were rivetted upon my face. Although drenched with perspiration, I (then) descended to have a bath once again. Coming out (of the lake) and being somehow led by my friend even like a river forced to flow against the current, I un-willingly returned home with my mother, thinking of him alone. On reaching there, I entered the Maidens' apartment and since then, distressed (as I was) at the separation from him, I could not realise all this—whether I (really) came back, (or) stayed there still: whether I was alone, (or) waited upon (by servants); if I stood silent, (or) had started talking; whether I was awake or sleeping; if I was weeping or otherwise; whether it was a pain or a pleasure; if it was love-sickness or a disease; whether it was a calamity or a festivity; if it was the day or the night; and what things were pleasing (to the eye) and what revolting. Unacquainted with the affairs of love, I did not understand anything as to where I should go, what I should do, what I should listen to, what I should see or talk, whom I should confide with or what was the antidote against it. I only ascended (the stairs of) the Princesses' Mansion, dismissed all my companions and forbade one and all the attendants from (even) coming to the door. I gave up all occupations; I sat alone looking through (Lit. with my face in) the jewelled lattice-window at the very direction which had an enviable sight and which because of his presence there, was, as though, (specially) adorned (or) full of flowers, (or) possessed a treasure of valuable gems, (or) inundated with the floods of the ocean of nectar, (or) embellished with the rise of the full moon; I longed to ask the news concerning him, of everything coming from that quarter—even the breeze, the fragrance of the wild flowers and the chirping of the birds: I desired even the hardships of austerities for they were dear to him (or he was dear to me); I accepted the vow of silence, as though, because he loved it (or I loved him); now entertaining a partiality (for everything that was connected with him) due to (my) love (for him), I looked upon the ascetic garb as far from being indecent as he had favoured it, (attributed) prettiness to youth as he was its receptacle, (ascribed) fascinating loveliness to the Pārijāta flower because of its contact with his ear, (considered) heaven as pleasing because of his residence

(there), (assigned) invincibility to Cupid (Lit. who had flowers for his weapons) on account of the affluence of his (Puṇḍarīka's) personal beauty ; I (eagerly) faced him even though he was far away even as a lotus-plant the sun, (or) the tide the moon, (or) a (female) peacock a cloud ; in the same way I wore round my neck, the rosary, as though, it was a preservative garland guarding against the exit (Lit. passing away) of my life afflicted at the separation from him and also tolerated the nosegay clinging to my ear, as if, it had started whispering (his) secret (to me) ; and all the while I stood motionless with one of my broad cheeks thrilled with the net of horripilation resulting from the pleasure of the touch of his hand and appearing like the buds of Kadamba serving as an ear-ornament.

Taralikā, the carrier of my betel-nut-casket, had been for a bath just with me. Later on, she turned up as if after a long time and softly communicated to me while I was in the same state, " Princess, (you know) those two young ascetics of celestial form we saw on the bank of the lake Acchoda ; of them one who himself placed this spray of the heavenly tree on your ear, followed close on my heels very stealthily, guarding himself (Lit. his sight) from the other (his companion) under the cover of the thick avenue of blossomed creepers, while I was on my way (home) and inquired with reference to your Ladyship, ' O girl, who was this maiden ? Whose daughter is she ? What's her name and where is she proceeding ? ' " To this I returned, " She is Mahāśwetā, the daughter of the Apsaras Gaurī who is sprung from the rays of the glorious Moon and of the King Hansa, the emperor of the Gandharvas, who uses for his footstool the lotus in Lakṣmī's hand, whose long arm is marked with the decorative paintings on the cheeks of the passionate Gandharva women when sleeping in amorous sport, and the series of the nails of whose feet are polished (Lit. rendered glossy) being rubbed with tips of the rays (proceeding) from the crown-jewels of all the Gandharvas. She has now started for the golden-peaked (Hemakūṭa) mountain which is the abode of the Gandharvas." When I had told this, he stood motionless just for a while and thinking of something, surveyed me for long with a steady gaze and implored me rather explicitly, " Oh lass, this appearance of yours, auspicious and free from frailty (as it is), does not give false promises even in this age (of yours Lit. childhood). So would you mind doing me a favour if requested by me ? "

To this, I respectfully returned, humbly folding my hands, " Sir, why need you talk so? In the absence of merit, great souls like you venerated in all the three worlds, do not condescend to cast, on persons like us, even a glance (that is) capable of annihilating all sin, much less a command. May you unreservedly order me what you deem fit to be done and (thus) oblige me ". As I addressed him this, he greeted me with an affectionate glance as if I were a friend, (or) a benefactress, (or) a restorer of life ; plucking a sprig of leaves from a neighbouring Tamāla tree, he pressed it on a slab of stone and with its juice that had the sweet odour of ichor of a Gandha-elephant, he wrote, on a rag torn off the edge of his (own) upper bark-garment, (this letter) with the tip of the nail of the little finger of his lotus-like hand. He (then) handed it over to me saying, " Please give this letter to that maiden secretly and when she is alone ". With these words, she took it out of the beetle-casket and showed it (to me). But the (mere) talk about him, even though it consisted of words (only) and (as such) though it formed the province of the ear (alone), produced within me the pleasure of touch and infused me with the charm, as though, of the influence of the God of love, that entered me out and out,—which could be inferred from the appearance of bristles (all over my body) ; I took from her hand that piece of the bark-garment and deciphered the following lines scribbled thereon :— Holding out hope of fulfilment, thou hast fanned the yearning of my heart, enticing it with the pearl-necklace white like lotus-fibres, as one would carry away a swan born in the Mānasa-lake, in a fixed direction, alluring it with a pearl-creeper, white like lotus-fibres.

My perusal of that (letter) all the more augmented the morbid emotion of my mind afflicted by passion as does the confusion wrought by the loss of one's bearings in the case of one (who has) lost his path, (or) the night in the dark fortnight of one without sight, (or) the cutting of the tongue of one without speech, (or) the conjurer's (magic) feather-brush of one unable to perceive correctly, (or) the tendency of talking in delirious fever of one habituated to incoherent talks, (or) the fatal sleepiness of one affected by poison, (or) the Lokāyatika system (of philosophy) of one seeking pleasure in unrighteousness (or) the spirituous liquor of one (already) intoxicated, (or) the zealous act of wickedness of one possessed (by a goblin). And that agitation made me extremely restless as does the flood a river. Because of (her fortune of) seeing him (Puṇḍarīka) a second time, I looked upon her (Taralikā), as though, she had performed an act of great merit, (or) enjoyed a residence in heaven, (or) was guarded by a deity, (or) had won a blessing, (or) drunk nectar, (or) become the (consecrated) queen of the three worlds; though she always used to be near and was greatly intimate with me, I began to talk to her reverently as if she were rarely to be seen and quite unfamiliar (unseen hitherto); even while standing by my side she seemed to me as though standing above all the world; (and in this state) I indicated an inversion of the relation between the maid and the mistress (that existed between her and me) inasmuch as I lovingly pampered her on her cheeks and her soft curly hair; and I repeatedly asked her "Taralikā, tell me in what condition did you see him? Of what other things did he talk to you? How long did you tarry there? How far did he come following us?" (and such other questions). Thus in the same condition, barring the entrance of one and all the servants, I spent (that) day in the same palace in her company, discussing that very topic.

In due course, the solar disc reddened, as though, having shared its redness with my heart (which was red—full of passion), reclined on the edge of the firmament; the Splendour of Day-light (eagerly) enamoured of the sight of the sun glowing with love, faded (Lit. became pale), as though, oppressed by passion and (therefore) prepared a bed of lotuses. (to appease the pangs thereof); the rays of the sun, (tinged) tawny in the cascades of mountains, full of red clay and rising up from the lotus-beds, clustered together, like the herds of wild elephants (flocking together getting up from lotus-beds); the day entered the caves of the Meru mountain along with the echoes of the rapturous neighing of the horses of the Sun's chariot, (the horses) that were ardently longing for rest after their descent along the (vault) of the sky; the lotus creepers in the cavities of half-closed red lotuses of which swarms of bees had entered: and (therefore) the hearts of which were full of darkness due to swoon at the separation from the sun, had begun to close (their eyes); and the couples of the Chakravāka birds had begun to separate after a mutual exchange of hearts which, as though, were passed through the hole of the common lotus-stalk which they had eaten up; just at this time, my umbrella-carrier came up to me and informed me "Princess, one of the two ascetic youths is at the gate! He says that he has come to ask for the rosary."

With the mere utterance of the term Munikumāra I, though confined to my seat, as if, flew to the gate, and suspecting that he (Puṇḍa- rika) had come. I summoned one of the (many) chamberlains and sent him with the order to go and usher him in. Then, just after a moment, I saw the other young ascetic named Kapiñjala—a companion worthy of him (Puṇḍarīka) like the Youth of Beauty or Madana of the youth, (or) the Vernal Season of Madana, (or) the Southerly Breeze of the Spring—coming along the path directed by the chamberlain who was pale on account of old age, and following him (viz. the chamberlain) like the morning sun-shine the moon-light. As he drew near, I marked his appearance rather greatly afflicted, (or) dejected, (or) blank, (or) supplicatory or suggestive of some desire unaccomplished. I got up, reverentially saluted (him), and myself fetched a seat for him. When he had occupied his seat, I washed his feet despite his reluctance and wiped them with the skirts of my silken upper garment; thereafter I sat near him on the uncovered ground. He waited just for a while, and threw a glance at Taralikā sitting by my side, as though, wishing to speak out something. From the very expression of his, I understood what he meant and so I assured him, “Sir, she is not different from me (Lit. my body). You can proceed without any misgivings.”

Thus assured by me, Kapiñjala spoke out, “Princess, what should I talk? The sense of shame restrains my speech from (even) introducing the subject at hand. How incongruous it is to construe—the tranquil ascetic folk contented in their forest residence and subsisting (merely) on roots and fruits with this world mostly full of love-affairs, crowded with amorous pastimes of various sorts, polluted with attachment to enjoyments of sensual pleasures and (so) meant for men with minds agitated (by passions). See here how fate is out for everything improper. Indeed the Almighty needs no effort to make a person a laughing-stock. I wonder if it befits the bark garments or suits the matted hair! Is it proper for the austerities or is it a part of the precepts of righteousness? What an unprecedented parody (of asceticism). But this is certain that it must be disclosed; for I find no others means; no other remedy is available. I see no other refuge; there is no other alternative; and if I don’t tell, it would suddenly lead to a grave calamity. I disclose it (to you only) because the life of a friend has to be saved even at the cost of one’s own life. You are aware that I openly remonstrated with him very severely in that way in the presence of your ladyship. Thus admonishing him, I angrily left the spot, gave up collecting flowers and went elsewhere. After your lady-ship had left, I waited for a short time and thinking as to what he might be doing then alone, I returned and hiding myself (Lit. my body) behind the branches (of a tree), I discerned the place (all over). But when I did not find him there, I began to think, " Can he have followed her as his mind is subjugated by passion ; or if she be gone, he, on coming to himself and being ashamed, dare not show himself to me ; or perhaps enraged (at my rebuff) he has already gone leaving me (here) ; or perchance he has moved to another part (of the forest) from here, searching me." Pondering over these (and other) probabilities, I stayed (there) for a short time. But, unaccustomed as I was to his absence even for a moment right up from the birth, I was pained (at heart) and I further thought, " Maybe, being ashamed at the loss of firmness (of the mind), he might even do harm to himself. There is no act, indeed, that would not be prompted by the sense of shame. It would not therefore, be proper to leave him alone (i.e. unattended)." Thus resolved, I started, seeking for him. In course of my search, the more I did not come across him the more I began to entertain apprehensions of various untoward incidents (befalling him)—with my mind nervous through affection for my friend and I beat the forest for a long time, watching closely here and there, vigilantly inspecting the thickets of trees and creepers, the avenues of sandal trees, the bowers of creepers, the banks of the lakes (and so on).

I found him, thereafter, in a thicket of creepers which lay by the side of a lake and (the growth of which was) so thick that it was, as though, fashioned out of flowers, (or) full of bees, (or) cuckoos, (or) peacocks and (hence) being extremely charming (it appeared), as though, it was the birth place of Spring. He had given up all occupations and as such he appeared, as though, painted in a picture, (or) carved out, (or) paralysed, (or) dead, (or) fast asleep, (or) deeply absorbed in Yogic meditations ; he was free from any activity, yet he moved from his proper conduct ; he was alone, nevertheless, attended by Madana ; he was full of passion (redness), at the same time, pale ; he had his heart empty, however, occupied by his beloved ; he was speechless, even while expressing the acute pangs of love ; he was seated on a slab of stone all the same preparing for suicide ; he was being tormented by the flower-arrowed God who lay unseen out of fear that he (Puṇḍarīka) might proclaim a curse on him ; quite motionless as he was, his body was void of sense-organs, since they had, as though, entered his heart to observe the beloved that dwelt there, (or) vanished at the fear of unbearable affliction, (or) disappeared leaving the body, being provoked at the mental agitation ; he was shedding a ceaseless shower of tears, many a stream of which was emitted through the space between the eyelashes, by his eyes still and closed and as though, irritated within by the smoke of the fire in the form of Madana inflaming inside ; he was giving out (heavy) sighs that moved the filaments of the flowers on the neighbouring creepers, (sighs) that rushed out taking with them the reddish lustre of the lower lip, which was rather the rising flame of the fire of love that was consuming his heart ; his forehead was brightened by the spotless rays radiating from his nails, as he reclined his left cheek against the palm of his left hand and so it appeared, as though, decked with a mark of extremely white sandal-paste ; his ear appeared, as if, to possess a blue lotus or a sprout of Tamāla tree on account of the swarm of bees muttering, under the pretext of (their) sweet but indistinct ' buzzing, cupid's charm that brings on infatuation (संमोहनमन्त्र) when they (the bees) were allured by the pleasure of the fragrance that was still lingering there, as the Pārijāta flower serving as his ear ornament, was removed only recently ; under the plea of horripilation (appearing on his body) due to the fervent love-longing, he wore, close to his person, a mass of broken flowery tips of cupid's arrows fallen on every pore (of his skin) ; with his right hand, he held, on (his) chest, as an ensign of rudeness, the necklace flashing with a pencil of rays from (his) nails and (hence), as though, bristling with the pleasure of the touch of his hand ; he was being struck by the trees with the pollen in their flowers, which was, as if, the subjugating magic powder of Madana ; the shoots of the Aśoka trees in the vicinity (often) touched him when shaken by breezes and (thus) as it were, imparted (to him) their hue (Lit. redness, passion) ; the Sylvan Grace (incarnate) was consecrating him with the showers of honey from the bunches of blooming flowers which (showers), as though, stood for the (holy) waters at the time of his coronation as king of the realm of love ; the God of Love was smiting him, as it were, with hot and smouldering shafts in the form of Chāmpaka buds falling on him and the fragrance of which was swallowed by teems of bees (hovering over him) ; the Southerly Breeze was chiding him with the humming sound of the bees intoxicated with the exuberent odour of the woodland, as if, it was its (i. e. of the breeze) threatening roar ; he was rendered fidgety by the month of Chaitra with the din of hosts of cuckoos cooing sweetly but indistinctly under the influence of passion, which (din) was, as though, the clamour of victorious cries in honour of Spring; he was clothed in pallor like the (pale) moon of the dawn, (or) emaciated even as the (subsided) stream of the Ganges in summer, (or) fading, being internally consumed as does the sandal-creeper (with fire inside); he seemed (quite) a different person (altogether) (or) like one unseen uptil now, (or) one unacquainted, (or) one undergone transmigration, (or) one transformed, or one possessed (by a ghost), (or) one influenced by a devil, (or) one seized by an evil spirit, (or) one mentally deranged, (or) one duped, (or) one blind, (or) deaf, (or) dumb; he was, as though, absorbed in dalliance, (or) sunk in love; his disposition now being not self-controlled, he had reached the climax of the influence of love, and as such (i. e. as a result of all this) his original form was difficult to recognize.

Gazing at him in that condition with a winkless eye for a long time, I was overpowered with dejection and my heart began to tremble as I reflected, "So irresistible, indeed, is the power of cupid that he has, in a moment, reduced him to altogether different state against which there should be no remedy! Otherwise, how could a treasure-house of knowledge of this type all of a sudden, become null and void! How strange it is that he, who right from his childhood had been of a steady nature and of an unerring conduct, and who (as such) was of a demeanour to be envied by me and other ascetic youths, should this day, like an ordinary fellow, be stupified by passion, with (his) knowledge disregarded, prowess of austerities slighted and profundity destroyed! Youth free from a slip, is seldom to be met with." Drawing near I took a seat on a part of that very slab and placing my hand on his shoulder, I asked him who still had his eyes closed, "My dear Puṇḍarīka, what's all this?" Then with great effort, he opened his eyes, as though, irritated or full of agony, as though, they were stuck fast being closed for a long time, (the eyes) which had been reddened as a result of a constant weeping and wetted with the flow of tears and which (therefore) had the hue of a bed of red lotuses screened with a white silken garment; and looked at me for long with a languid gaze; he heaved a long sigh and said slowly and with great difficulty, faltering (Lit. with letters scattered) through shame, "My dear Kaṣṭhījāla, thou dost know all this, why dost thou then, question me?" On hearing that, I realized from his condition that his malady was (absolutely) irremediable; with all that, resolving that a friend ought to ward off his companion embarking on an unrighteous path, I exhorted him,—

" Friend Puṇḍarīka, all this is well known to me. Yet I ask you this much only. Is all this that you are out to do now, assigned to you by your teachers, or studied by you in the Scriptures, or is it a means to secure merit, or a new (Lit. another) fashion of practising penance, or the path leading to heaven, or the secret of a vow, or a device for the realisation of Summum bonum, or a different sort of religious observance ? Is it at all proper for you even to think of this, much less to express or to see it ? Don't you, like an unenlightened person, realize yourself being made a butt of ridicule by this accursed cupid ? For only a fool is tortured by him. What hope of pleasure can you imagine in this sensual objects condemned by the good and highly prized by the vulgar ? That idiot, who superimposes the idea of happiness on sensual pleasures that bring in their wake a series of calamities, indeed, waters a grove of poisonous creepers with the notion of acquiring merit, hugs the blade of a sword thinking it to be a garland of blue lotuses, grasps a deadly (Lit. black) serpent considering it to be a line of smoke of black aloe, clasps burning charcoal taking it to be a (red) gem, or extirpates the pestle-like tusk of an infuriated tusker believing it to be a lotus fibre ! You have realised the essential character of the objects of senses, still why do you carry that impotent knowledge as the fire-fly its (futile) light, when you do not control your turbulent mind, and check your senses excited by the prevalence of violent passion and taking to waywardness, like the streams (rendered turbid by a thick mass of dust and flowing outside the course) ? (After all) Who is this Cupid ? Rely on your firmness and put down this depraved (one). But he intercepted me in my discourse and wiping off from his eyes the flow of tears that had started through every interval between the eyelashes, he uttered, reclining on my hand, " Dear, what is the use of further exhorting (me); you are well at ease for you have not entered the range of these Cupid's darts, deadly as they are, like the impulses of the poison of a snake. It is much easier to offer counsel to others. He alone deserves to be advised who is in his senses, or has a mind (free to think), or can see or listen or understand what he has heard, or is able to discriminate between the good and the evil ! But in my case all this is far away. Firmness, wisdom, courage, consciousness-talk about all these has vanished. This life somehow hangs on effortlessly in this way. The (proper) time for tendering advice has elapsed long since. The occasion for exercising courage is long past. The opportunity for a reflection has slipped away and the hour of resorting to knowledge (too) is left far back. Who, but thee, is to advise me at this time or divert me from pursuing a wrong course ? On whose words but thine should I rely now ? Who else (excepting you) is a friend to me in the whole world, who would fill your place (Lit. like you) ? What can I do now since I cannot bridle myself up ? You have seen how in so short a while I am reduced to this wretched plight. This is not the time to offer advice. I wish, before I die (Lit. as long as I live), a treatment administered against the fire of love which is as scorching as the rays of the twelve Suns that arise at the period of the Dissolution. I feel that my limbs are inflamed, my heart boiling, my eyes scorched and my body burning. Now do what is opportune". With these words he stood quiet.

In spite of his defence, I tried to dissuade him off and on. But when he did not lend me his ear though I explained to him clearly in coaxing and entreating terms, (recounting) the precepts of Scriptures, with illustrations and with (references to) historical episodes, I reflected: "He has reached the climax; now he cannot be forced to retrace his steps. Counselling is of no avail now. Let me at least try to save his life." With this resolve, I got up, went to the lake and cut out therefrom juicy lotus-fibres, plucked lotus-leaves furnished with water drops, and took off red, blue and white lotuses, charming with the sweet fragrance of the pollen inside. (With these) I returned and prepared a bed for him (therewith) on the same slab embowered with creepers. When he had stretched himself there at ease, I (plucked and) squeezed the tender shoots of sandal and other trees hard by and with that juice inherently sweet and cool like snow, I made a mark on his forehead; I smeared (therewith) the whole of his body, beginning with the soles of his feet. To stop his perspiration, I used the dust of camphor strewn (about) through the holes of the cracked barks of a neighbouring (camphor) tree, powdering it with my hands. I laid, on his chest, a (strip of) bark-garment wet with sandal-juice and fanned him with a plantain-leaf shedding sprays of transparent water. I was, thus, busy with arranging his bed with fresh lotus-leaves now and then, besmearing his body with sandal-juice again, wiping off his sweat often (with the camphor-dust) and ceaselessly fanning him with the plantain leaf, when I thought with anxiety: "Nothing, indeed, is difficult for the Mind-born to achieve. What a vast difference there is between this person (i. e. Puṇḍarika), innocent by nature and contented with his dwelling in the forest, and Mahāśwetā, the daughter of the emperor of the Gandharvas and store of various amorous sports and sentiments. Few things, indeed, are difficult for him (i. e. Love) to fashion or perform and few are left unsubdued or undone (by him) in this world. Insolently he moves on towards objects, even if they be inaccessible. Who can defy him? What need we say of sentient beings when he is capable of mating even inanimate things, if it pleases him! To instance: the Kumudini entertains a passion for the rays of the Sun; the Kamalinī as well, forgets her dislike for the rays of the Moon; the Night too, mixes with the Day; the Moon-light adapts herself to the Darkness; the Shade, also, faces a (burning) Light; even the Lightning forgets fickleness (Lit. becomes steady) in the company of the Cloud, and similarly Old Age moves on with Youth. What is left for him as difficult to achieve when he contrived to reduce this profound ocean of tranquillity (i. e. Puṇḍarīka) to an insignificant state like the (fickle) blade of grass? How great was his penance and how mean is this condition (of his)! This danger has (all of a sudden) cropped up and there is no means to counteract (it) in any way. In order to save his life, what should I do now, how should I act, where should I proceed, whom should I resort to, what remedy can there be, who would be my help-mate, what plan should I adopt, what device should I employ, or what refuge should I seek? By which tact or expedient or in what way or by which resolute determination or design or consolation would he live?" These and other thoughts came and crossed my mind which was distressed through grief. I further reflected: "What purpose would be served by the contemplation of such unprofitable thoughts? I must protect his life by any means—fair or foul. Barring (his) union with her, there is no other alternative to save it. On account of his boyhood and shyness, he may be considering his love-affair as antagonistic to his austerities, as unworthy (of himself) and as if a mockery of his own self; it is, then, certain that he would never fulfil his cherished desire by himself proposing to her, even if he be breathing his last breath (Lit. his life remaining by one breath only). His love-sickness brooks no delay. The good opine that a friend's life should, in all cases, be protected by committing even a base act howsoever censurable (it may be). This extremely ignominious and ignoble deed has become obligatory for me. What else could be done? What other alternative could there be? By all means, I must run to her and inform her of this plight (of his)" Thus determined, I have come hither, leaving that place under some excuse without even informing him, as I apprehended that he might disallow me through shame if he knew that I was out for an unseemly act. This being the case, Your Ladyship is at liberty to act what is opportune or in keeping with this sort of love or in conformity with my visit to this place or what befits you. Concluding thus, he stood silent, fixing his eyes on me with the expectation as to what I might reply.

As I listened to it, I felt myself lying above all ecstasies, as though, plunged in a lake of ambrosial bliss, (or) merged into the ocean of sexual pleasures, (or) standing on the summit of (the fulfilment of) all cherished desires, (or) carried over the highest pitch of all festivities; I communicated (to Kaṭiñjala) that it was the occasion for great joy (for me), through the flow of clear drops of tears of joy—(tears) heavy and big as they did not come in contact with the eye-lashes, falling again and again in continuous succession (and therefore) appearing, as if, threaded in a garland, and which did not touch my dimples as my face was bent a little through bashfulness that arose in me that very moment—I immediately began to muse: “Thank God, that this Cupid has closely followed him too as he did me; To be true, even while tormenting me, he has (now) to some extent manifested his favour to me. If it is true that he is in this condition, what, then, has Love not done to oblige me? What has he not accomplished (for me)? Who else is my friend as helpful as him? How would a lie, even in dream, slip from Kaṭiñjala’s mouth, serene as his appearance is? When matters have come to this stage, what should I also do? What should I say in his presence? Even as my thoughts ran so, the door-keeper hurried in and informed me: “Princess, learning from her attendants that you are indisposed, Her Majesty is on a visit to you”. On hearing it, Kaṭiñjala, fighting shy of great people, quickly sprang to his feet and whispered, “Princess, here arises an occasion that would delay you; the Divine Sun, the crest-jewel of the three worlds, is about to set; so I must go; here I fold my hands with all my heart to beg (of you) a present viz. the protection of the life of my dear friend; this is all I have at my command”. Thus, without even waiting for some time for a reply, he departed, somehow finding an exit through the gate entirely blockaded by the female door-keepers, that were entering with golden staves in their hands, heralding my mother, and by bands of chamberlains and by (other) attendants who carried betel-leaves, flowers, scented powders and cosmetics, whose hands were busy waving chowries and who, in their train, were followed by persons—hump-backed, thin-bodied (or barbarians), deaf and dwarf and by eunuchs and deaf-mutes. My mother came to me, stayed with me for a long time and returned home. Absent-minded as I was, I little perceived what she did on coming there, what she talked (or) how she acted.

After her departure, when the Sun, who has pigeon-like green steeds, who is the lord of the existence of the day-lotuses and the friend to the Chakravākas, went down the western horizon and became red ; the beds of lotuses turned green ; the east became dark and when the mortal world became enveloped in darkness that was as dark as the mud from the nether worlds, as though, engulfed in the floods of oceans at the time of the final Destruction, I utterly at my wits' end, asked that very Taralikū (who had helped me so far) : “ Dear Taralikū, how is it that you don't understand that this heart of mine is so completely perplexed and my senses so perturbed through diffidence. I am unable to decide by myself even a little bit as to what I should do. Please, guide me to do what is proper for the occasion. Here Kaṣiñjala has left saying so in your very presence. Blinded by passion, if I, without the permission of my father or the consent of my mother, were to approach him of my own accord and get myself married (to him), giving up, like ordinary maidens, (all feeling of) shame, forsaking patience, abandoning modesty, not minding public scandal, infringing the dictates of good conduct, disregarding my character, slighting the noble family and courting infamy, (I am afraid) there would accrue (to me) great demerit through the violation of (my) elders. On the other hand, resorting to the other alternative through consideration for Dharma, if I were to choose death, even then, in the first place, there would follow the rejection of the affectionate solicitation of the noble Kaṣiñjala who approaching me of himself, preferred a request for the first time. Secondly, in case there occurs a fatal disaster to his life through disappointment caused by me, there, too, I would be guilty of a grave sin, arising from the murder of an ascetic.” While I was arguing thus, the approach of Moon-rise rendered the east dusky with the faint glimmers like the vernal grove with the pollen of flowers.

Then, the eastern quarter appeared, with the (advancing) splendour of the Moon, as though, rendered pale with pearl-powder from (Lit. generated in) the temples of elephants in the form of darkness— (the temples) that were torn off by the lion in the form of Moon with (its) paws, (or) whitish with the mass of sandal-powder fallen from the bosoms of the Siddha Beauties (dwelling) on the Eastern Mountain, (or) whitened with the rising sands on the shore—(the sands) heaved up by the breezes over the waves of the surging sea. By slow degrees the moon-light, spreading about, beautified the face of Night, as if, it was the radiance of the teeth (of Night, falling around) as she smiled gently at the sight of the Moon (her Lord). Thereafter, the night began to be adorned with the orb of the moon shooting up through the surface from the subterranean region, even like the rounded hoods of Śeṣa (shooting up etc.). Gradually, charm was imparted to Night by the rising Moon who, like the youth, was full of nectar, delighted the whole of humanity, was endeared by passionate ladies, had just discarded the early phases (Lit. childhood), was the ally of Cupid, was now full of flush and who alone deserved to enjoy carnal pleasures.

Now, I saw the Moon arisen; he was tinged with the glow of his recent rise (and as such) he appeared, as though, flashed with the hue of corals in the ocean nearby, (or) stained with the blood of (his) fawn mauled by a lion on the Rising Mountain, with its paws, (or) marked with the (red) alaktaka dye applied to the soles by Rohiṇi angered in love quarrel; (at his sight) my heart, though burning with the blazing fire of love inside, was darkened (with passion); my body, though resting on the lap of Taralikā, was entirely in the hands of Cupid; my eyes though fixed on the Moon, faced death; at the very moment, I began to think (rather nervously), "On the one hand, here are assembled Cupid, the month of Chaitra, the Malaya-breezes and others and on the other, stands this villainous and wretched Moon that cannot be withstood, and my heart is distressed with the utterly unbearable agonies of love. The rise of this (i.e. of the Moon) is, in my case, tantamount to the shower of burning coals over one seized with burning fever, to a snow-fall over one shivering with cold, (or) to a bite of a deadly cobra to one fainting under the swelling due to poison. But in the midst of my thoughts, swoon brought on by Moon-rise, closed my eyes, (overpowering me) even like the langour (brought on at the Moon-rise and withering beds of lotuses). But, shortly afterwards, I regained consciousness through the fanning and by the application of sandal-paste hurriedly fetched by Taralikā. I saw her (i. e. Taralikā) sobbing, holding over my forehead a stick of oozing moon-stone, with face clouded with showers of uninterrupted tears, smitten with confusion, as though, possessed by dejection in a corporeal form. Finding that I had opened my eyes, she fell at my feet and folding her hands besmeared (Lit. wet) with sandalpaste, requested me, "Princess, what is the use of being ashamed or having consideration for the elders? Pray, be pleased to despatch me (there). I will (soon) bring that person dear to your heart or get up yourself and start for that place. Henceforth you will not be able to suffer this emotion which intensifies the love-longing a hundred-fold (Lit. which produces hundreds of longings) at the rise of the powerful Moon, even as the ocean (characterised by sharks and which lashes into fury—Lit. surging with hundreds of waves—at the rise of etc.)". Cutting short her speech, I remarked. "Foolish girl! what is love to me? Here has arrived the Moon (one friendly to the white lotuses), removing all thoughts of hesitation, pushing aside all search for means, obviating all obstacles, dispelling all doubts, eliminating all fears, uprooting the feeling of shame, covering the fault of levity arising from my voluntarily going to him and avoiding all delay; he would conduct me either to death or to him (i. e. Puṇḍarīka). Therefore, come along, let me honour him, while I live, by somehow going to him, my beloved, who is worrying me (so much)." So saying, I got up, somehow supporting myself on her, as my limbs were distressed through fatigue of the swoon caused by passion. As I started, my right eye commenced throbbing foreboding an evil. I thought (rather) apprehensively, "This is something new that fate has begun (now)."

Now, all the space in the world was submerged, with its light, by the orb of the Moon that had not advanced far enough, that imitated a big water-channel on the mansion in the form of the three worlds, draining, as if, floods of chunam, (or) emitting many a stream of sandal-juice, (or) showering thousands of streamlets of the celestial Ganges, (or) pouring forth floods of the ocean of nectar; people (then) enjoyed, as though, a residence in the White Island, (or) the pleasure of a visit to the world of the moon; the globe of the earth was, as if, being lifted up from within the midst of the milky ocean, by the Moon that had the splendour of the round tusk of the Primordial Boar; in every house, the women-folk had started, in honour of the rising Moon, presenting respectful offerings of Argha consisting of sandal-water and scented with fully opened (night) lotuses; the thoroughfares were thronged with thousands of female messengers of love despatched by passionate ladies; like the splendour of beds of lotuses concealed under the lustre of blue lilies; the Abhisārikas veiled in blue silken garments, were flying about, startled by the fright due to the light of the moon; with swarms of bees attached to every flower, the lotus-creepers in the pools of the houses, were blooming ; with their interior being whitened with the thick pollen from the beds of expanded lotuses, the atmosphere put on the appearance of an islet in the river of Night ; the world, like the great ocean, saturated with delight at the Moon-rise, was, as if, full of emotion of love, (or) made up of festive moods, (or) filled with graceful movements, (or) composed of joys (alone) ; the first watch of night was agreeable with the notes of garrulous peacocks exulted (at the noise of) springs (gushing) from the water-courses of moon-stones ; at this time, I descended from the balcony of the palace, veiling my face with a red silken garment which was, as though, woven out of the rays of rubies, unobserved by any of my attendants but (only) followed by Taralikā having (in her hands) various flowers, tāmbūla, cosmetics and perfumed powders ; my locks of hair were disorderly and greyish because they stuck to the same slightly concealed sandal-mark on the forehead and my dress was soaked in the unguents in the form of sandal-paste applied (to my body) in (my) swoon ; I had the rosary round my neck in the very same position and the nosegay of the Pārijāta kissing the tip of of the ear.

Descending, I came out through a side-gate of the Pramadavana and proceeded towards him, closely followed by a swarm of bees dragged by the fragrance of the spray of Pārijāta, running after (me), vacating the gardens and—deserting beds of lotuses, producing the illusion of a veil of a blue garment. On my way, finding myself unattended (by any servant) and with Taralikā alone by my side, I reflected, “ Of what avail is the suite to one advancing to meet one’s dearest ? Isn’t it that these play the role of attendants ? For, Cupid follows (me) with his arrow fixed on a strung bow. The Moon guides (Lit. drags) (me), stretching out his arm (Lit. rays). Passion supports (me) at every step with the fear that I may slip. My heart pushing aside all feeling of shame, is running ahead together with the senses. Longing leads me on, seating me on resoluteness (i. e. making me resolute)”. I said openly, “ Taralikā, my dear, would this miscreant of the Moon, seizing him by his hair, with (his hands in the form of) rays, even like me, drag him towards me ! ” But at this Taralikā only ridiculed me, “ Princess, aren’t you mistaken ? What regard does he entertain for him (i. e. Puṇḍarika) ? For, he himself, like a love-sick person, is making (those) various gestures towards your Ladyship. Why ! Under the guise of his reflection, he is kissing your cheeks bedewed with drops of perspiration. With his arms (rays) throbbing, he is falling on (your) charming protuberant breasts. He is feeling the jewels in (your) zone. With his body—reflected in (your) spotless nails, he is falling at your feet. Besides, on his body he is bearing, like one smitten with love, pallor like the smear of sandal unguents dried up by the fever (of love). His arms (rays) are white like (with or due to) the coils of lotus fibres. Under the pretext of his image (therein), he is falling on (in) the crystal flooring. He is plunging in the lotus-pools with his feet (rays) dusty with the pollen from the filaments in the ketakī plant. He lays his hands (rays) on the moon-stones wet with sprays of water. He deserts (Lit. hates) beds of day-lotuses with pairs of chakravākas parted". Engrossed in these and other talks appropriate for the occasion, I came near that spot with Taralikā. There, I was just washing my feet that were dusty with the pollen of flowers on the creepers on my way, in the pools of the (oozing) moonstones flowing from the slopes of the Kailāsa mountain at the rise of the Moon, when I perceived a sound of weeping not very distinct because of distance and preferably of a man, on the western bank of the lake in the very region where he (i.e. Puṇḍarīka) lay. From the very beginning some misgiving was lurking in my mind and now by this (sound), my heart was, as though, entirely rent asunder ; with a sad heart, as if, betraying some misfortune I nervously said, "Taralikā what can this be ?" and with my limbs seized with tremor, I quickened my pace in his direction.

There, I heard Kapīñjala whose voice could clearly be ascertained even from a distance on account of the prevalence of midnight, raising bitter cries of distress and bewailing (piteously) in this and other ways, " Alas ! I am doomed, I am ruined, I am duped ! Ah ! What is this fallen to my lot ! What's all this ! I am undone. You ghoul of Cupid, ill-willed, villainous, merciless, what an atrocious act have you committed ! You vile, sinful, ill-mannered Mahāśwetā, what wrong did he do to you ! You Moon, wretched, ill-behaved, base-born, be now contented ! Oh you accursed Southerly Breeze, lost to all civility, fulfilled are your desires, accomplished is your mission ! Blow you, now, at ease ! Oh venerable Śwetaketu, fond of thy son, thou knowest not that thou hast been robbed ! Woe me ! Piety, you are now property-less ! Oh Penance ! you are now without any support ! Oh Saraswati, you have, (now), become a widow ! Oh Truthfulness, thou art orphaned (now) ! Oh Heaven ! You are void ! Dear friend, pray wait for me. I would also follow you. I am unable to stay back alone without you, even for a moment. How is it that to-day you, like a stranger, (or) a person unseen before, have gone away leaving me all of a sudden ! How is it that you have become so hard-hearted ! Without thee—oh tell me—where should I go, whom should I beg and whom should I submit to ! I am left without a guide ; the quarters are desolate to me, life useless, penance purposeless and the worlds joyless ! With whom am I to move and to whom should I talk ! Please respond to my call ! Where has disappeared that affectionate friendship (of yours) with me and where has gone that mode of speech (of yours) always introduced with a smile ”.

Hearing that, even from a long distance I gave out a loud scream, as though, I had lost my life, and with all my strength ran up to that place, as if, I was carried, being lifted up by somebody ; (while running) my upper garment got entangled in the creepers on the bank of the lake and (as such) was tattered ; I faltered at every step in my quick strides, not knowing whether they were set on even or uneven surface. There, on a bed of lotus-fibres, which was rather a delicate garland of lotuses—white, blue and red—and of various other wild flowers, which appeared to be made up of shafts of the Flower-arrowed God, and which was situate near the bank of the lake on a plane slab of moon-stones oozing showers of cool drops, I, unfortunate and sinful, saw the holy one (i. e. Puṇḍarīka) lying only recently expired ; being extremely still, he looked, as if, listening to the sound of my footsteps ; he was, as if, fallen asleep comfortably that very moment, for the pangs of love were (now) relieved by the internal anger ; he seemed practising Prāṇāyāma, by way of expiation for his ruffled mind ; with his lower lip radiating lustre, he was, as though, saying, “ It is for your sake that I am reduced to this plight ” ; as he had turned on his side through (his) hatred for the moon, he appeared, as though, pierced by his (Moon’s) rays under the pretext of the rays shooting from the nails of his (Puṇḍarīka’s) hand which was placed (by him) on his heart afflicted by the fire of love ; his forehead was marked with a line of sandal—paste, (now) dry and pale, which (line) had the appearance of the crescent of the (waning) moon in the form of Madana, risen to portend his own destruction ; his eyes were not quite closed—a part of them was contracted through the agonies of the darts of the Love’s arrows ; the pupils, being turned round, were slightly visible ; they (the eyes) looked red due to constant weeping and therefore appeared, as though, shedding blood, for the tears were dried up as the life was extinct ; his life had forsaken him, as though, through rage that some other person (i. e. Mahāśwetā) was now dearer to him than itself (the life); he was enjoying the comforts of the state of being non-sentient having, as though, voluntarily discarded life along with the agonies of passion; or rather contemplating on the science of the acquisition (योगविद्या) of Love; or, as though, practising some unusual process of control of breath (प्राणायाम); Cupid had, as though, snatched away his life by way of bakheesh as a mark of favour for having brought about my arrival (there); dressed in the (special) attire for the vow in honour of Cupid, with the triple stripes (of sandal paste serving as holy ashes) on his forehead, with the sacred thread consisting of juicy lotus-fibres, with the fine garment made of the (delicate) leaf from the interior of the plantain tree, closely touching his shoulder; with the necklace as a rosary of big seeds (in his hand), with his body whitened with the thick smear of pure camphor serving as the holy ashes, and charming with fibres tied (round his wrist) as protective amulets, he was, as if, endeavouring to obtain the spell to unite with me; he was, as if, rebuking me lovingly with his eye, saying, "O hard-hearted girl! you did not even oblige me, your attendant, by showing yourself to me a second time; as his mouth (Lit. lips) was slightly opened, his front was brightened up with the rays of his teeth which were coming out, and which were, as though, the lunar rays that had entered his body to rob him of his life; with his left hand placed on the heart that was rather breaking by the tortures of passion, he was, as though, stopping me seated in his heart, saying "Oh you, dear to me as my life, be pleased; do not go away along with my life"; as he had stretched and raised the other (hand)—bristling with the rays—radiating from his nails and hence, as though, shedding, (the sap of) sandal (tree), he appeared, as if, warding off the ("hot") moon-light (therewith); he had by his side the Kamaṇḍalu, an associate in his austerities, which was, as though, looking, with its upraised neck, the path by which his life had passed only recently; with the coil of fibres serving as the necklace, he seemed, as though, being carried away to the other world, tied with the nooses in the form of the rays of the moon; at my sight Kapīñjala raised both of his hands and shrieked out "help! help!" and with the flow of tears doubled, clasped him (Puṇḍarika) by his neck.

Overpowered by the darkness caused by the swoon, I felt myself, as though, entering the infernal regions and I knew nothing as to where I went, what I did or what I talked. I could not understand even this viz. why at that very moment my life did not pass away—whether it was due to my stupid heart which is hard (or) to the fact that I was destined to undergo (this) long-standing grief, (or) because I was the abode of the misdeeds done in the past lives, or because it was the result of the skilfulness of the diabolical fate in causing agony, (or) whether it was due to the extreme crookedness of (this) accursed Cupid. Only this much (I knew that) regaining consciousness after a long time,—Ah me !—I saw myself rolling on the surface of the earth, burnt (incessantly) by unbearable grief, as though, I was fallen into fire ; when I got up I couldn't believe that impossibility viz. his death and my survival and shouting an afflicted cry, I lamented “ Alas ! Alas ! what has befallen me ! O mother, O father, O friend ! ”, I bewailed, “ O my Lord—the prop of my life—please tell me where are you going—O cruel one—leaving me alone and helpless ! Inquire of Taralikā—what state I passed through for your sake and how, with great difficulty, I passed the day which to me was like thousands of ages ! Be pleased, talk with me at least once show compassion to this devotee of yours ; cast at least one glance at me ! Fulfil my cherished desire. I am distressed, I am devoted to you, I love you, I am helpless, I am a child, I have no other go, I am grieved, there is none whom I can look to for protection, I am overpowered by love,—why don't you take pity on me ! Tell me did I offend you ? Have I failed to carry out (what you wished) ! What order of yours did I disobey ? What thing was there that was agreeable to you and yet not liked by me that you should get enraged and go away forsaking this devotee of yours without any (just) cause, not fearing any public censure ? O what a sinful crooked (woman I am), clever in cheating with insincere attachment that I am still alive ! I am doomed, unfortunate as I am ! How is it that everything is lost to me—yourself, my modesty, my kinsmen, the heaven. Fie upon me—who have done misdeeds, that you should be reduced to this state for my sake ! There can be no woman with so devilish a heart that I went home, leaving you in such a condition. Of what use are these to me—my home, my mother or father, my relatives, servants (when you are lost to me). Woe to me ! With whom shall I seek protection ? O fate, take pity on me—I request you give me a present (in the form) of my lover ! O gracious Destiny ! Have pity for me ! Save this helpless lady ! I was, as though, melting away or being liquefied or being reduced to a watery state under the pretext of incessant showers of tears falling over and over from the eyes. The syllables of my lamentation also gushing out (of the mouth) were, as if, attended by streams of tears, as they were accompanied by the tips of rays (flashing) from the teeth ; with the flowers dropping in close succession, my hair appeared, as if, shedding drops of tears and my ornaments, as well, weeping with the tears in the form of pure rays (radiating) from the jems, I, as if, longed for his revival and my death ; with all my soul I wished to enter the heart of his who was dead ; with the palm of my hand, I touched (his) cheeks (his) forehead, the roots of matted hair of which were whitened by dried sandal-paste, (his) shoulders whereon were placed the succulent fibres, and (his) bosom that was covered with lotus-leaves that were rolled in the drops of the sandal-juice ; I rebuked him saying “ O Puṇḍarīka ” how merciless are you ; you do not pay regards to me who am so afflicted ; I implored him off and on ; kissed him often and often ; repeatedly embraced him and cried profusely. I condemned the necklace saying “ You wretched, you, too, did not withhold his life till I returned ! ” I fell at Kaṣṭhījāla’s feet now and then, beseeching him “ O Sir, be pleased to revive him ”. Again and again, I clasped Taralikā round her neck and wept bitterly. I still wonder, when I think, how those thousands of miserable yet coaxing expressions, unimagined, uninstructed, uninitiated unseen heretofore, occurred to this accursed self at that time ? Whence did those affectionate phrases and those extremely pitiable wailings of distress, came to me ? Unparalleled was that incident. The streams of tears gushing from within gave rise, as if, to the waves of the Deluge, as if, fountains of tears were let loose, (by me) within me ; shoots of distressed cries were, as if, growing (from me) ; sorrows grew, as if, to hundreds of heights ; swoons, as though, ran up in series, You Revered Sylvan Deities ! be gracious, give me (back) his life ! Protect me, O earth ! O Night, you who bestow favours on the whole of the world ! Why don’t you (then) have sympathy for me ? O fatherly Kailāsa (Mountain), I submit to thee, show kindness unto me ! ” In such and other terms I cried loudly—I didn’t know how long—like one seized by a devil, (or) haunted (by an evil spirit), (or) like one frenzied (or) possessed by a ghost.

Even as she was narrating her account thus, swoon subdued her consciousness, as if, she somehow experienced that very miserable past. But Chandrāpiḍa who was grieved, hurriedly stretched his hand, like a servant, and held her as she was falling suddenly on the slab of the stone. Fanning her slowly back to consciousness with the skirts of her own upper garment that was wet with tears, he was moved with compassion; his cheeks were washed by the flood of tears and he said to her who had now come to herself, "O Revered Lady, I am, indeed, sinful for I have renewed your grief which has brought you to this plight. So enough of this story! Let it be cut short (here). I, too, cannot attend to it. For (one's) sorrows, though belonging to the past, when made the subject of confidential talks with friends, cause in a friend, while being narrated, agonies equal to those (actually) experienced (by the narrator). Pray, do not therefore, again and again, subject this precious life of yours somehow held up, to the state of fuel to the fire in the form of recollection of the grief".

Thus consoled, she heaved a long and hot sigh and replied despondently, with eyes full of tears, "Prince, it is too much (to imagine) that this ruthless life that did not desert me then at that frightful and accursed night, would leave me now! I feel that even the Lord of Death must be shunning my sight, ill-fated and sinful as I am! Whence could this hard heart of mine have grief? All this (grief) is a false show in the case of this wicked and depraved heart. This (heart) that has entirely renounced the sense of shame, has made me the fore-most of the shameless (women). Of what account is this narration to me, who under the stimulus of manifested passion, experienced all this, like one fashioned out of adamant? What other account, more painful than this, will be there, which would defy hearing or narration? I shall only tell you that mysterious incident that succeeded this "bolt from the blue". I shall disclose (to you) that slight cause for sustaining my life, that is not quite manifest (to me) and that occurred then, whereby I, supported by the mirage of a distant hope, am still tolerating this burdensome, purposeless, ungrateful and wretched body—which is almost dead and which is, as if, belonging to someone else. Please hear!

Thereafter, when things had happened thus in that strange condition, I bewailed in various ways, and bent upon committing suicide, I said to Taralikā, "You hard-hearted, get up, how long are you going to weep? Get together some sticks of wood and arrange the pyre. I shall follow my lord (to the other world)". Just then, from out of the lunar orb, there suddenly descended through the firmament, a person of extraordinary features and celestial form, bearing the characteristics of a great personage, with the body sparkling like the night-lotuses, tucking his silken upper garment while like a ball of ambrosial froth, (the garment) sticking to the edge of his armlet and fluttering on the wind ; his broad cheeks flashed with the (red) lustre of the gems in the ear-rings dangling from both of his ears ; he had, on his bosom, a highly brilliant garland which, because of the big pearls (therein), was, as though, a cluster of stars strung together ; his head-gear was knotted with the skirts of a white silk cloth ; his head was full of clusters of curly hair dark like a swarm of bees ; his ear-ornaments were of full-blown moon-lotuses ; his shoulders were marked with decorative lines of saffron-paintings on the breasts of lustful damsels ; with the halo of the radiance of his person, pure as it was like transparent water, he was, as it were, bathing the quarters : with the scented showers of multiple sprays of nectar, dripping from his body and cool, as though, causing a shivering sensation, he was anointing (the space), as if, with thick frost, and was sprinkling (it viz. the space), as though, with a mass of excellent sandal-paste ; (on descending), with his hands massive like the trunk of Airāvata, having a cool touch and the fingers of which were white like fibres, he picked the dead (Puṇḍarīka) and addressing (me), like an earnest father, in a (solemn) voice as deep as the sound of a drum, "Oh child, Mahāśweṭī, don't you kill thyself, you will be reunited with this Puṇḍarīka", he flew up taking him with him. Horrified and awed by that incident, I looked up with great curiosity and asked Kapīñjala what it meant. But he, utterly confounded, sprang to his feet without returning any answer and angrily shouting, with his face upturned, "You wicked, whither are you proceeding, robbing me of my friend". (So saying), he girt up his loins with his upper bark-garment and speedily rose up into the sky, pursuing him (viz. the Divine Person) who was flying up. Even before my eyes, they all vanished entering the stars.

By the disappearance of Kapīñjala, which to me was, as if, a second death of my Lord, my grief was doubled, which completely broke my heart. I was utterly non-plussed ; I questioned Taralikā, "Dear, don't you know what it is ?" On witnessing that occurrence, poor she, at that moment, with nervousness natural to women, her slender frame trembling, being overpowered by fright that eclipsed grief, apprehended my death and said piteously with a sad heart, "Princess, I am too sinful to grasp this. With all that, it is a great mystery. He was a person of a superhuman form. While departing, he has, like a father, consoled your Ladyship sympathetically. Generally, such celestial figures do not fail in their promises even in dreams, much less when actually seen. Even though I ponder, I can't imagine even the slightest cause that he should tell a lie. Therefore, please think over this and (you'll see that) it is desirable for you to desist from this resolve of committing suicide. At this stage this is, indeed, a great ground for assurance (for you). Besides Kapñjala has already gone in his trail. So, you can continue to live or court death only on knowing from him (Kapñjala) everything—whence he came or who he was or why for he picked him (Puñḍarika) dead and took him away or where he carried him or wherefore he assured your Ladyship, holding out this hope of re-union which (on the face of it) is improbable. For death is not at all a difficult thing (to undertake) when (once) decided upon. That can be undertaken even later. Kapñjala will never fail to see Your Ladyship as long as he is alive. Therefore, you should preserve your life at least till the time of his return, " and so saying, she prostrated before me. Thinking that it was the proper course (to follow) at that time, I have not given up my life (partly) due to the love of life which nobody in the world has been able to overcome, (partly) due to the levity natural to woman, (partly) due to the mirage of distant hope raised by his assurance and (partly) due to the expectation that Kapñjala would return. What is not brought about by hope ! (Thereafter) on the bank of that very lake (that) I, with Taralikū as my companion, passed, without a wink of sleep (Lit. with sleep destroyed), that sinful night which (to me) was like the one that succeeds the Deluge, which was long like thousands of years which was, as though, full of agonies and grief (or) hellish, (or) blazing with fire. I rolled on the ground as before ; my face was covered with loose and disorderly hair dusky with the dust-particles and sticking to my cheeks wet with tears ; my throat was parched with the voice failing, being hoarse due to violent cries.

(Next day) I got up very early in the morning and took bath in that very lake ; making up my mind, I took up the same Kamaṇḍalu and collected those very bark-garments and the same rosary, out of love for him (Puñḍarika) ; I had realised the futility of worldly existence, I knew that I lacked in merit ; I had understood that the swoop of calamities was too terrible to resist, comprehended that grief was too difficult to control ; I reflected on the cruelty of fate, ascertained that affection begets too many miseries ; I perceived that all the entities are of a transient nature, marked that all the pleasures vanish all of a sudden ; I disregarded my father and mother, abandoned all my kinsfolk together with the attendants ; then, retracting my mind from sensual pleasures, controlling my senses, I took up (this) vow of celibacy and seeking refuge, I submitted to this Śiva, the Lord of the three worlds and the solace of the helpless. On the following day, my father, on getting news (about me) from somewhere, visited me along with my mother and relations; he, too, wept for a long time and tried one and all means that I should come home, entreating (me) in many ways, advising (me) in all sorts and consoling (me) variously. But, when (at last) he realised that I could not be prevailed upon in any way to desist from this resolve (of mine), he, though disappointed, stayed here for many days—the affection for the daughter is too hard to be wiped off—and repaired home full of grief and with his heart-burning inside. Since my father's deparature, showing (my) greatfulness towards that person (viz. Puṇḍarīka) only by shedding tears, wasting, with hundreds of different (strict) religious observances, (this) wretched body exhausted through love for him, abounding in demerit, with the feeling of shame disappeared from it, grown inauspicious and the abode of thousands of various afflictions and troubles; subsisting on fruits, roots and water of the forest, I, suffering from prolonged grief, have been residing in this very cavern, with Taralikā—recollecting, under the pretext of telling the beads of (my) rosary, the many virtues of his, bathing thrice a day in this lake and daily worshipping the gracious Śiva (Lit. the three-eyed one). This is that I who am sinful, void of any auspicious marks, shameless, cruel, destitute of affection, hard-hearted, censurable, created to serve no purpose, with (my) life fruitless, forlorn and without any happiness. What purpose of this noble person (Chandrāpīḍa) would be served by paying visits or putting queries to me who have committed as heinous a sin as this Brahmin-slaughter." Concluding thus, she covered, with the skirts of her white bark-garment, her face, like the moon blotted by a patch of an autumnal cloud and wept bitterly and loudly for a long time, being unable to stop the on-rush of gushing tears.

Chandrāpīḍa had already, at the very outset, entertained reverence for her on account of her form, modesty, courteousness, sweet manner of conversation, unattached behaviour, severe asceticism, tranquil demeanour, unaffected nature, nobility and purity; and now his heart was captured by that amiability that she had, then, shown by the account she had narrated and by her gratefulness (she had manifested towards Puṇḍarīka)—which filled him with admiration all the more. His heart melted away (with affection) and he slowly addressed her,

“Revered Lady, the people, fighting shy of (physical) tortures, ungrateful, greedy with attachment to pleasures, are incapable of performing any deed worthy of their love and so manifest their affection only by weeping and shedding fruitless tears. But you have shown everything by your action, what then possibly you have not done befitting your love that you should weep ! For that (your love) you have abandoned your very dear relatives that had developed acquaintance with you right up from your birth, as though they were strangers. Even worldly pleasures, though close to you, have been condemned by you, treating them like straw. You have relinquished the pleasures attendant on prosperity that excelled even those arising from the affluence of Indra. By tortures unsuited to it, you have further enaciated your frame, very frail like a lotus-creeper. You have accepted celibacy. You have employed yourself in the performance of austere penances. You have taken to forest-life, though difficult for women (to follow). Persons oppressed by grief easily abandon their life. It requires great effort to expose (it) to great troubles. What is termed as ‘following one to his grave’ is entirely devoid of any fruit. This is a path trodden by the uncivilized. That life should be discarded on the death of one’s father, brother, friend or husband, is indeed a fit of infatuation, a working of ignorance, a commitment through rashness, a mean notion, a great blunder and an error resulting from folly. If life does not pass away of itself, it should not be given up. If one would think over this point (thoroughly one would find that) committing suicide is selfishness for it betrays one’s inability to counteract the unbearable agonies of grief. Besides, it does no good to the dead person. For it is no remedy to bring him back to life, nor is it a means for storing merit, nor is it a motive to gain the auspicious worlds, nor can it prevent (the dead) one from being condemned to hell, nor is it an expedient for seeing him (again), nor is it an excuse for (their) mutual re-union. Again, he (the dead one) is taken to an altogether different place in store for him according to the maturity of the fruit of his own deeds, while the other (the suicide) is only associated with the sin of self-slaughter. But the latter, if he continues to live, can help a lot both the dead one, and himself by the offerings of water and in many other ways ; but by killing himself, he benefits neither. Call to mind that Rati, the faithful and dear consort of her husband, the glorious Cupid that captivates the hearts of all women, who did not part with her life even when he (Cupid) was consumed in the fire of Śiva’s (eye) ; (bring before your mind) that Prithā of the house of the Vṛṣṇis, and the daughter of Śūrasena, did not put an end to her life even when her Lord, the handsome Pāṇḍu, the whole of whose foot-stool was scented with flowers in their crests by the entire circle of Princes subjugated with contempt (for their power) and who enjoyed the tributes of the whole world, had been reduced to the state of fuel to the fire of the curse of the sage Kindama; (remember) also Uttarā, the young daughter of Virāṭa, who sustained her life even when (her) modest and valiant Abhimanyu who, like the young moon, was a source of delight to the eyes (of the world), had expired, as well as Dhṛtarāṣṭra's daughter Dulśala fondled on their laps by her hundred brothers, that did not desert her life even when (her) very lovely Jayadratha, the king of the Sindhu country, whose prowess was augmented by the boon that Śiva had conferred on him, was despatched to the other world by Arjuna. We hear of thousands of maidens from among the demons, the Gods, the Asuras, the Sages, the Men, the Siddhas, the Gandharvas and others, who continued to live, though bereft of their husbands.

You can even abandon your life if re-union with (Puṇḍarikā) is a matter of doubt. As for you, your Ladyship has yourself heard the (divine) words (assuring you) of re-union. What hesitation should there be to give a trial to it? How can falsehood, even if there be a sound reason, find an abode in the words of such great persons of super-human forms, whose words never prove to be false? What sort of re-union could there be between you alive and him dead? Undoubtedly, it is for this purpose, viz. to revive him that, that magnanimous Person filled with compassion, picked him up to heaven. Inscrutable, indeed, is the power of the great. Worldly incidents take various courses. Mysterious, also, is Destiny. Highly miraculous are the super-human powers attained by penance. The potentialities of Karman are of diverse kinds. Even after profound reflection, what other reason but the gift of fresh life to him can we ascribe to him being snatched away and so you should, on no account, take it to be quite improbable. The course of such occurrences has long been in vogue. For instance, Pramadīcarā, the daughter of the Gandharva king Viśvāvasu and Menakā, who was deprived of her life by a snake in the hermitage of Sthūlakeśa, was given half of his life by Ruru, a young sage of the Bhṛgu family, the son of Pramati and the grand-son of Chyavana. Arjuna, also, who was slain, while following the horse of the Horse-sacrifice, by his son Babhruvāhana with his arrow in the van of battle, was made to breathe again by the snake-princess Ulūpi. Similarly, the divine Vāsudeva moved with pity with the lamentation of Uttarā, restored the costly life of Abhimanyu's son Parīkṣit, who was born dead, being burnt by the fire of Aśvatthāman's missile. Again, it was he (Vāsudeva) whose feet are respected in all the three worlds, that exerted his influence and brought back, from the city of Death, the son of the brahmin, Sandipani of Ujjain. Somehow, here too, may happen something of this sort (who knows) ! With all that, how can we help or with whom are we to find fault ? 'The divine creator prevails (everywhere). Destiny is all powerful. One can't even breathe by his free will. How malicious are the freaks of the extremely cruel and vile Fate ! 'They do not tolerate guileless and pleasant love, for a long time. In most cases, joys are by their very nature perishable and evanescent, while the sorrows are naturally long-lasting. Therefore, creatures are with great difficulty, united for one life (whereafter) separation follows in thousands of other lives. Therefore, it is not fair for you to condemn yourself, unblameable as you are. Such incidents do befall worldly persons. But the strong-willed ones overcome all adversities." 'Thus, he comforted her with these and other consolatory and agreeable words, and reluctant though she was, he prevailed on her to wash her face once again with the hand-ful of water of the streams, fetched by him.

Before we start reading the text, it is desirable and convenient to know precisely what the author has said in the pages preceding. This will lead to an easier and clearer understanding of what follows. We have attempted elsewhere to narrate succinctly the 'story' of कादंबरी (Vide Introduction). The students would do well to read the 'story' in full before embarking upon the study of these pages.

It will be seen from the 'story' that before our portion starts, Chandrāpīḍa chanced to see lake अच्छोद while he went a-chasing the kinnara couple. The preceding paragraph is a description of the lake. Now follow Chandrāpīḍa's first thoughts on seeing the lake. This paragraph is an excellent illustration of almost all the qualities and defects of Bāṇa—his imagination, his vocabulary, his command over language, his repeated use of figures of speech and at the same time his lack of sense of proportion and his verbosity.

“यत्र च दशरथवचनमनुपालयन्नुत्सृष्टराज्यो दशवदनलक्ष्मीविभ्रमविरामो रामो महासुनिमगस्त्यमनुचरन् सह सीतया लक्ष्मणोपरचितपर्णशालः पञ्चवक्ष्यां कंचित्कालमुवास । विरश्न्येऽद्यापि यत्र शाखाविलीननिभृतपाण्डुकपोतपङ्क्तयो लभ्यतापसामिहोत्रधूमराज्य इव लक्ष्यन्ते तरवः । बलिकर्मकुसुमान्युद्वरन्त्याः सीतायाः करतलादिव संक्रान्तो यत्र रागः स्फुरति लताक्सिलयेषु । यत्र च पीतोर्ण जलनिधिजलमिव मुनिना निखिलमाश्रमोपान्तवर्तिषु विभक्तं महाहृदेषु । etc. etc. (p. 23 Kādambarī).

आलोकमात्रेणैव etc. Chandrāpīḍa's exhaustion suddenly disappeared at the mere sight of the lake. अहो निष्फलमपि etc. He was at first sorry on account of his vain pursuit of the Kinnara couple but when he descried the huge lake he felt that all his ado did after all bear fruit though in another form. The sudden disappearance of one's exhaustion when one reaches the goal is also mentioned in अथ प्रभृत्यवनतार्जि तवास्मि दासः

क्रीतस्तपोभिरिति वादिनि चन्द्रमौलौ । अह्वाय सा नियमजं क्लममुत्ससर्जं क्लेशः फलेन हि पुनर्नवतां विधत्ते ॥ कुमारसंभव V. 86.

तुरगमुखमिथुनानुसरणं—तुरगस्य (of the horse) मुखं इव मुखं यस्य तयोः मिथुनं (couple) तस्य अनुसरणं (pursuit). द्रष्टव्यदर्शनफलं द्रष्टव्यस्य (worth-seeing) दर्शनं तद्रूपं फलं or द्रष्टव्यं यद्वस्तु तस्य दर्शनं तस्य फलं (the first is better) खलु—indeed, for the necessary force of खलु cf. न खलु बहिस्पायीन् प्रीतयः संश्रयन्ते । (मालतीमाधव I.21) रमणीयानामन्तः—The limit or the last word in objects beautiful. Note how Bāṇa uses every time a different word for 'sight' (दर्शन) and also for 'end' (अन्त) अवधिः—The furthestmost limit. "सीमान्तलेखा—सीमायाः अन्तलेखा प्रान्तलेखा" अवसानभूमिः—i. e. the terminating spot. "अवसानभूमिः प्रान्तभूमिः ।" इदमुत्पाद्य etc. Chandrāpīḍa means that the water of the lake is far superior to nectar (अमृत) and so the creator having once created the lake was indulging in useless repetition in creating nectar. वेधसः—creator, cf. तं वेधा विदधे नूनं महाभूतसमाधिना । (रघुवंश I.29) "एकमेव वस्तु नामान्तरेण विहितमिति भावः । अमृतगुणोपपादनेन पुनरुक्ततां स्पष्टयन्नाह—इदमिति ।" सरःसलिलम् is the object of उत्पाद्य and अमृतरसम् of उत्पादयता which qualifies वेधसा । सर्वेन्द्रियाह्लादनसमर्थम्—capable (समर्थ) of gladdening all the senses. The taste of nectar produces in all the senses a divine sensation. Chandrāpīḍa suggests that the water of the lake was also capable of producing the same result. अतिविमलतया—'On account of its clarity' कमलसुगन्धितया—'On account of the fragrance of the lotuses' कमलस्य or कमलानां सुगन्धो यस्मिन् तस्य भावः तत्ता ।—The student should understand the difference between सुगन्धिन् and सुगन्ध. The former means 'sweet-smelling, fragrant or a thing which is redolent with perfume' while the latter means 'fragrance, perfume' etc. As the lake was सुगन्धि with कमल, सुगन्धितया is the proper word and not सुगन्धतया. नियतं चास्थैव etc. This is a poetic reason for the continued residence of Lord Śiva on the Kailāsa mountain. Chandrāpīḍa says that the Lord's desire to see the lake is responsible for His continued stay there. Thus, he is indirectly extolling the lake. This sentence is an illustration of the figure of speech called कान्यलिंग in which the charm lies in a poetic reason as in "जितोऽसि मन्द कन्दर्प मञ्जितोऽस्ति त्रिलोचनः ।" नियतम्—(Ind.) 'Positively, certainly'. -उमापति = husband of उमा (पार्वती) i. e. Lord Śiva. The student should collect the synonyms of Śiva in this portion. न खलु सांप्रतम् etc. The idea is to find fault with lord Viṣṇu for resting in the ocean instead of in this huge mass of water. रथाङ्गपाणिः—रथस्य अङ्ग—रथाङ्गं तत् पाणौ—हस्ते यस्य सः चक्रपाणिः भगवान् विष्णुः । जलशयनदोहदं—The desire

(दोहद) to sleep in water. दोहद here means a 'vehement desire' (अभिलाष) as in प्रवर्तितमहासमरदोहदा नरपतयः in वेणीसंहार IV Act. दोहद also means the longing of a pregnant woman (डोहाले in Marathi) as in 'प्रजावती दोहद शंसिनी ते तपोवनेषु स्पृहयालुरेव' । रघुवंश XIV. 45. अमृतसरसुराभिसलिल-अमृतस्य रसः इव सुरभि (fragrant) सलिलं यस्य । लवणरस etc. लवणः रसः तेन परुषं (hard) पयः यस्य-or लवणरसं (saline) परुषं (hard) च पयः यस्य. उदन्वति—in the Ocean. It is common knowledge that lord Viṣṇu sleeps in the Ocean. cf. 'इतः स्वपिति केशवः कुलमितस्तदीयद्विषाम् ।' नीतिशतक. The poet says that lord Viṣṇu does not now entertain any desire for a watery bed for if he had he would not have slept in the ocean, abandoning this lake with water as delightful as nectar. Probably, as the next sentence shows, this lake was not in existence when the lord fulfilled his दोहद and hence he slept in the ocean. नूनंचेदं etc.—Here is yet another attempt to establish the superiority of the lake over the ocean. The earth (भूतधात्री—भूतानां प्राणिनां धात्री—the supporter of beings) which was afraid of the प्रलयवराह entered the ocean for protection. It appears, therefore that the lake was not then in existence; otherwise how would the earth prefer a 'tiny ocean' (the water of which was drunk by अगस्त्य in but one mouthful) to the huge lake. For if the earth were to enter the lake for protection, even thousands of Boars (वराह) would not have been able to face her; much less one. Bāṇa, while indulging in a fancy, has slightly deviated from the original mythological account. The earth was not afraid of वराह but of हिरण्याक्ष. For detailed account of the story see App. IV. प्रलय-वराहघोणाभिघातभीता—प्रलये (प्रलयकाले—At the time of universal destruction) यः अवताररूपः वराहः (Boar) तस्य घोणायाः (of the snout) अभिघाताद् भीता. कलशयोनिपानपरिपीतसकलसलिलं—कलशे (pitcher) योनिः (birth) यस्य (i. e. Sage अगस्त्य) तेन पानेन परिपीतं सकलं सलिलं यस्य)—qualifying ocean. The word कलशयोनि is significantly used. It indicates that the ocean was so small that even a person born in a pitcher could drink it up. For कलशयोनि cf. Appendix IV. 'अनेन अस्य समुद्रस्य अतिन्यूनत्वं ध्वनितम् ।' अगाधानेकपातालगम्भीराम्भसि—अगाधानि यानि अनेकानि पातालानि तद्वत् गम्भीरं अम्भः (water) यस्य—qualifying the lake. 'एतेन कल्पान्तेऽपि एतस्य सरसः अवस्थानं सूचितम् ।' नूनं च अस्मादेव etc. Here is another idea brought in to establish the greatness of the lake. The water that the Doomsday clouds fetch (for flooding the entire universe) is from this lake only [where else would they get the supply sufficient to flood the universe?]. सलिललेशं—drops of water. Note that Bāṇa knows how clouds are formed. प्रलयदुर्दिनान्धकारितदशदिशः—प्रलयकालीनं यद् दुर्दिनं

or respectful offering or oblation to gods or venerable men consisting of rice, Durvā, grass etc. with or without water. cf. आपः क्षीरं कुशाग्रं च दधि सर्पिः सतण्डुलम् । यवः सिद्धार्थकश्चैवाष्टाङ्गोऽर्घः प्रकीर्तितः ॥ उपकूल etc. उपकूलं (Near the bank) ये शिलातलाः तेषु उपविष्टैः जलमानुषैः (mermaids) निषेव्यमानः आतपः यस्मिन्. अभ्यर्णतया च कैलासस्य etc. On account of the proximity of the Kailāsa mountain, the मातृ (divine mothers) used to go to the lake for ablution and therefore the path towards the lake was marked with their foot-prints. स्नानार्थं आगतं यद् मातृणां मण्डलं तस्य पदानां पङ्क्तयः तासां मुद्राः भूमौ तत्प्रतिकृतिरूपाः तथा अङ्कितम् । मातृ=Divine Mother, said to attend on Śiva but usually on स्कन्ध. The Kailāsa, the abode of Lord Śiva, was in the vicinity of the lake. गणपति, the son of Śiva and Pārvatī often came to the lake for a dip in its water. Hence it was sprinkled over with ichor flowing from the temple of the elephant-God. अतिप्रमाण etc. अतिप्रमाणैः (of huge dimensions) पादैः अनुमीयमानः (which could be inferred) नृषितः यः कात्यायन्याः (of Pārvatī) सिंहः तस्य अवतारार्थं (descent) मार्गः सरसिसमागमपन्था यत्र Pārvatī's lion came to the lake to satisfy his thirst. He himself plunged into the lake. हस्तपाशाशृङ्खलया —is some-what obscure. The commentator explains it as “हस्तबन्धनार्थं यः पाशः ग्रन्थिः तदर्थं या शृङ्खला तथा । The commentators as well as the annotators have made the matter worse. The correct meaning seems to be ‘हस्तेन पाशः यस्याः सा शृङ्खला—a chain that could be tied with hand i. e. a handy chain or हस्ताकाराः पाशाः यस्याः सा शृङ्खला. पाश means a joint of a chain. The joints of which are of the form of the palm of the hand. Out of these two interpretations we prefer the first. Mr. Kane explains it as a chain made up of the bands he carried in his hand. This is unwarranted for in no case the reins can be used as a chain for tying the feet of the horse. Mr. Kale interprets it as a chain for tying hands and hence a slender chain! This is too not tenable inasmuch as nowhere do we find any हस्तपाश of this type. His second interpretation is the same as that offered by Mr. Kane. Both these are based on the commentaries “हस्तपाशो भवेद्ग्रन्थिः यस्याः सा कथ्यते तथा”। आमोद. “हस्तपाशं हस्तग्राह्यमुखरज्जुः स एव रज्जुः शृङ्खला” कादम्बरीपदार्थ-दर्पण. रज्जु cannot be शृङ्खला and what ground is there to interpret it as मुखरज्जु? सरस्तीरदुर्वाप्रवालान् is the object of क्षिप्त्वा. कृपाणिकावल्लान्-कृपाणिकया (dagger) अवल्लान् (cut). अवल्ल from लृ with अव. चातक इव कृत्वा जलमयमाहारम्—like a चातक bird, (he) took food which consists of water only. It is well known that the chātaka bird lives on water that falls from the clouds before it reaches the grounds. Cf. सूक्ष्मा एव पतन्ति चातकमुखे द्वित्राः पयोबिन्दवः। भर्तृहरि. चक्राह इव etc. tasted pieces of lotus-fibres like a चक्रवाक bird (i. e. the rudy goose—known for constancy in love, cf. “दूरीभूते मयि सहचरे चक्रवाकीमिवैकाम्। मेघवृत्त) शिशिरांशुभिः करग्रैः स्पृष्टा कुसुदानि—touching with his fingers (करस्य अग्राणि) the lotuses like the moon (शिशिराः i.e. cool अंशवः rays यस्य) which also touches, with the tips of her rays (कराग्र), the lotuses. The pun rests on the word कराग्र. फणीवाभिन्नन्य जलतरंगवातान्. Chandrāpīḍa enjoyed the cool breezes from the water because he was exhausted while a serpent (फणी) enjoys them because it is its food. Cf. हिंसाशून्यमयत्नलभ्यमशनं धान्ना मरुत्कल्पितं। व्यालानां पशवस्त्वृणाङ्कुरभुजाः सृष्टाः स्थलीशायिनः॥ भर्तृहरि. अनङ्ग-शर etc. अनङ्गस्य (cupid) शराणां ग्रहणैः आतुरः (excited). उरासि निधाय etc. A man struck with love's shafts uses lotus-leaves as covering for his chest (नलिनीदलोत्तरीयं) in order to cool himself. Chandrāpīḍa also wanted to cool himself as he was tired. सीकराद्रपुष्करोपशोभितकरः whose hand (कर) looked charming with lotus (पुष्कर) that was wet with spray (सीकर), like a wild elephant whose trunk (कर) looks charming because its end (पुष्कर) is wet with spray. The pun is based on the two words कर and पुष्कर. “करो (हस्तः शुण्डा च) पुष्करं (कमलं शुण्डाग्रं च)”। प्रत्यग्रभग्नशिशिरैः (qualifying कमलिनीपलाशैः) प्रत्यग्रं (recently) भग्नानि अत एव शिशिराणि (cool) तैः जलकणिकाचितानि—filled with drops of water (जल-कणिका). लतामण्डप-लतामण्डपेन परिक्षिप्ते—in apposition to शिलातले— with a bower of creepers overhanging. स्वस्तरमास्तीर्य—spreading a bed. Chandrāpīḍa was thus taking rest. But in a short while he chanced to hear a divine music which was first noticed by इन्द्रायुध who dropped his morsel of grass (उन्मुक्तकवलेन) उन्मुक्तः कवलः ग्रासः येन, who cocked his ears (निश्चलश्रवणपुटेन lit. the tips of whose ears became steady निश्चल स्थिरं श्रवणपुटं यस्य) and who turned his face towards it (i.e. the direction from which the sound of the music was coming) (तन्मुखीभूतेन). All the words in the acc. sing. qualify गीतशब्दम्. वीणायाः तन्म्यः तासां शङ्कारः तेन मिश्रम्. विगतमर्त्यसंपाते-विगतः मर्त्यानां (mortals) संपातः (movement) यस्मिन्. संभूतिः origin or possibility (संभवः). इति समुपजातकौतुकः here इति has the sense of 'cause' as in 'पुराणमित्येव न साधु सर्वम् ।' अतिदवीयस्तथा. The ichor is also dark like तमाल tree. It is also full of swarms of bees who go there on account of its fragrance. Path of Chandrāpīḍa is compared to that of the rut of a quarter-elephant. The common properties are fragrance, presence of bees and darkness. दिङ्नाग = a Quarter-elephant. One of the eight elephants who are said to guard and preside over the eight cardinal points. The student would see from this description of the उत्तरकुरु why the word उत्तरकुरु had come to be synonymous with स्वर्ग. Bāṇa, of course, has not used the word in this sense. It refers to some northern country. For the use of the word उत्तरकुरु in the sense of स्वर्ग cf. "उत्तरकुरुवासो मयाऽनुभूयते" स्वप्नवासवदत्तम् IV Act. नमेरुकुसुम etc.—dropping the pollen of the Nameru blossoms. नमेरु is the name of a tree. पशुपति etc. पशुपतेः (Lord Śiva) जटासु बन्धः तेन (being tied) आर्तेन (exhausted) वासुकिना परिपीताः तेभ्यः—(remnant) तैः; शेषैः मरकतहरितैः this and other forty-five adjectives qualify the trees. हारिहारीत etc. हारयः (attractive) ये हारीताः (pigeons) तेषां रुतिभिः (chattering) रमणीयैः भृङ्गराज etc. भ्रमन्तो ये भृङ्गराजा (large bees) तेषां नखैः (sharp nails) जर्जरितानि (perforated) जरठानि (advanced, ripe) कुट्टमलानि येषां तैः; जठर is another reading for जरठ. जठर would mean 'hard, stiff,' उन्मद etc. उन्मद (intoxicated) यत् कोकिलानां कुलं तेन कवलीकृतानि (gulped up) सहकारस्य (mango tree) कोमलानि अग्रपल्लवानि यत्र तैः; उन्मद-षट्चरण etc., उन्मदा (fervent) ये षट्चरणाः (bees) तेषां चक्रवालेन (swarm) वाचालिताः (resounding) विकचाः (full blown) चूतस्य (mango) कलिकाः यत्र. अचकित etc. अचकिताः (emboldened, undaunted) ये चकोराः तैः शुम्बिता मरिचस्य (Pepper creeper) अंकुरा यत्र. The reading चकित seems to be incorrect. चम्पक etc. चम्पकस्य ये परागाः तेषां पुञ्जेन पिञ्जरा ये कपिञ्जला तैः जग्धानि पिप्पलीफलानि यत्र. The चम्पकपरागा had fallen on the कपिञ्जल. Hence they were tawny. जग्ध P. P. P. fr. जक्ष् 2P. (अद् कर्मणि-क) eaten up, swallowed up. फलभरनिकर etc. फलानां भरस्य निकरेण निपीडिताः (bent) ये निविडा दाडिम-वृक्षाः (pomegranate trees), तत्रस्थेषु नीडेषु (nests) प्रसूताः कलविङ्काः (sparrows)

यत्र. Sparrows had delivered young ones in the nests built amidst the grove of pomegranate trees that were bending under the load of their fruit. प्रक्रीडित etc. प्रक्रीडिताः (sportive) चपलाश्च (sprightly) ये कपयः (monkeys) तेषां कुलस्य करतलताडनेन तरलितानि (shaken) ताडीपुटानि- (leaves..of palm trees, यत्र). अन्योन्य etc. अन्योन्यकलहे (mutual quarrel) कुपिताः ये कपोताः तेषां पक्षपालीभिः (ends of wings) पातितानि कुसुमानि येषु; कुसुम etc. कुसुमानां रजः तस्य राशिभिः (heaps of pollen) याः साराः (variegated-शार) सारिकाः (starlings) तामिः आश्रितानि (occupied) शिखराणि येषु. The tops of the trees were occupied by starlings tinged or variegated with the heap of the pollen of flowers. शुकशत etc. शुकानां शतं शुकशतं (hundreds of parrots) तस्य मुखैः नखशिखरैः च (or मुखानां नखानां च शिखरैः) शकलितानि यानि फलानि तैः स्फीतैः (laden, abundant). जलधर etc. जलधरस्य (cloud) जले आदौ लुब्धाः प्रश्नाद् विप्रलुब्धा ये मुरधाः (innocent) चातकाः तेषां ध्वनेन (sound) मुखरितानि तमालखण्डानि (Tamāla groves) यत्र. The dark Tamāla trees produced the illusion of clouds. The thirsty chātakas flew to them, being eager for the rain-water but were baffled in their longing and hence the tamāla groves were ringing with their cries. For the longing of चातक bird for rain-water cf. Bh. II 51 and R. 17 “ एतेन तमालखण्डानां कृष्णवर्णत्वेन जलधरभ्रमान्मुग्धचातकैः प्रार्थना इति ध्वनितम् । ” इभकलभ etc.—इभानां (elephant) कलभकैः (young ones) उल्लूना खण्डिता ये पल्लवाः तेषां वेल्लितानि (tossed) आन्दोलितानि लवलीवलयानि येषु; वेल्लित P. P. P. fr. वेल् I P. to shake, to tremble. आलीयमान etc. आलीयमानाः आसमन्तात् लीयमानाः अन्तः प्रविश्यमावा ये नवयौवनेन मत्ताः पारावताः तेषां पक्षाणां (wings) क्षेपेत् पर्यस्ताः स्तबकाः येषु; तनुपवन etc. तनुना पवनेन (mild breeze) कम्पितानि यानि कोमलानि कदलीदलानि (banana leaves) तैः वीजितैः (fanned); अविरल etc. अविरलः (thick) यः फलानां निकरः (collection) तेन अवनतानि (bent) नालिकेरवनानि (cocoanut-groves) यत्र. It is curious that Bṛ̥ṇa should make a mention of cocoanut trees near the Kailāsa mountain, for it is a well known fact that cocoanut trees grow in the tropics and that too near the sea. The mention of पूरा trees (betel nut) also in the next clause appears to be incorrect. This is a rare mistake coming from the pen of Bṛ̥ṇa who is known for his exactitude. Probably the author is led away by the mass of water in the lake Acchoda. अकडोर etc. अकडोराणि (undeveloped) पत्रपुटानि (leaves) येषां एवंविधैः पूराविटपिभिः (betel-nut-trees) परिवृत्तैः अनिवारित etc. अनिवारिता— (unrestricted, fearless). ये विहंगाः तेषां तुण्डैः मुखैः खण्डितानि पिण्डखर्जूरानां (date-palm trees) जालकानि (bunches) येषु. मदमुखर etc. मदेन (intoxication) मुखरा (noisy) या मयूर्यः (peahens) तासां मधुरेण रवेण विराचितानि

अमतराणि येषां. It is strange that the cries of intoxicated and hence noisy peahens are called मधुर (sweet). Bāṇa alone could believe them to be so. The students will note that every one of these adjectives qualifies the word पादपैः (trees). आकलित etc.—आकलिता आ समन्तात् प्रादुर्भूता (growing armed) याः कलिकाः तासां कलापेन (collection) दन्तुरैः—(uneven bristling). कैलास etc. कैलासस्थाः याः तरंगिण्यः (rivers) तासां तरंगितेन सिकतिलः (sandy) तलभूमिभागः येषां. सिकतिल—सिकताः सन्त्यत्र इलच. Rivers from the Kailāsa watered the soil at their roots and thus made it full of sand. वनदेवता etc. which (qualifying foliage i.e. collection of leaves किसलयनिकर) was like the palm of forest-Deities. अलक्तक etc. which was, as though, besmeared with liquid अलक्तक dye. अलक्तक—red resin of certain trees, red lac or sap used by women to colour certain parts of their body especially the soles of their feet: the (red) tender shoots resembled the palms of sylvan deities because both are red. They seemed to be sprinkled with alaktaka dye. ग्रन्थिपर्ण etc. ग्रन्थिपर्णप्रासेन (grass) मुदिताः याः चमर्यः तासां कुलेन निषेवितानि (resorted to) मूलानि येषां ग्रन्थिपर्ण—name of a fragrant tree of which the deer are very fond. cf. “न ग्रन्थिपर्णप्रणयाश्रयन्ति कस्तूरिकागन्धमृगास्तृणेषु ।” विक्रमाङ्क I 17 चमर-री a species of deer from the hair of which chowries are made. कपूरागुरुप्रायैः— which mostly consisted of camphor and Aguru trees. इन्द्रायुध etc. This and the following twenty adjectives contain double entendre. The similes are श्लेषमूलक. श्लेष or paranomasia is defined as शब्दैः स्वभावादेकार्थैः श्लेषोऽनेकार्थवाचनम् । The charm lies in several meanings being found in the same words. Here the pun lies on the word घन which means (i) thick, and (ii) cloud. i.e. trees which were densely situated (घनावस्थान), like rainbows which are attended by or dependent on clouds (घनावस्थानैः). कुमुदैः etc. Both the lotuses and the dense trees did not let the rays of the sun in and had cool interiors, the former because they are closed during day and the trees because they were densely situated. न दत्तः दिनकाराय प्रवेशः तेन शिशिरं अभ्यन्तरं येषां तैः both with कुमुदैः and पादपैः. दाशरथि etc. Both the trees and दाशरथिवल (army of Rāma) had आज्ञननीलनलपरिगतप्रांत. (The trees) the borders of which had reeds black like collyrium (आज्ञननील); (the army) which was commanded by आज्ञन (i.e. मारुति) नल and नील; The reference to आज्ञन suggested by some commentators seems to be incorrect. प्रासादैः etc. पारावतः (i) monkeys (with पादपैः) (ii) pigeons (with प्रासादैः) cf. पारावतः कलरवे गिरी मर्कटतिलुके । भवन etc. संहिततवेत्रासनैः—(i) (with trees) having वेत्र and असन trees near by (ii) (with domestic ascetics भवनतापसैः) having cane seats nearby. आज्ञनवत् नीलानि, नलानि (reeds)

तैः परिगतः प्रान्तः येषां तैः (पादपैः); आज्ञननीलनलादयः कपयः तैः परिगतः प्रान्तः येषां तैः (दाशरथिबलैः). नल also means a lotus. भवनतापसस are those who do not take to forest-life but practise austerities in their dwellings. संनिहितानि वेत्रासनानि येषां तैः (भवनतापसैः); रुद्रैः etc. like रुद्र (the trees) were engirt by creeper-like serpents नाग (with रुद्रैः) नागलता ताम्बूली तथा बद्धः परिकरः येषां (तैः पादपैः); नागाः सर्पाः एव लताः ताभिः बद्धः परिकरः येषां तैः (रुद्रैः). रुद्रs—group of gods, eleven in number; they are supposed to be inferior manifestations of Śiva (शङ्कर) who heads them all. “रुद्राणां शङ्करश्चास्मि” भगवद्गीता X. 23. “रुद्राणामपि मूर्धानः क्षतहुंकारशंसिनः” कुमारसंभव II. 26. The Vedic conception of रुद्र is different from the classical one. At the same time it forms the basis of the latter. उदधिकूल etc. like the sand on the shore of the sea (the trees) had clusters of shoots (प्रवाल) and sprouts (लताङ्गुर) very thickly put forth (पादपैः). निरन्तरं उद्भिन्नानि प्रवालानां लताङ्गुराणां च जालकानि येषु तैः; निरन्तरं उद्भिन्नानि प्रवाललताङ्गुराणां जालकानि येषु तैः (पुलिनैः) closely spread with clusters of shoots of coral creepers. अभिषेक etc. like coronation-waters (i) full of all sorts of flowers, fruits and leaves (पादपैः) (ii) medicated with all flowers, fruits and leaves (अभिषेकसलिलैः). “मङ्गलकर्मणि सर्वोपाधिः प्रसिद्धा”; बहुवर्णैः चित्राणि पत्राणि येषां (एवंभूतानां) शकुनीनां शतं तेन संशोभितैः (पादपैः); बहुवर्णोपेतानि यानि चित्राणि पत्राणि सन्ति येषां ते शकुनयः सन्ति येषु (आलेख्यगृहैः)—like Art-galleries looking beautiful on account of the paintings of hundreds of birds with wings in different colours. कुरुभिः etc like Kurus, adorned with (i) भारद्वाज birds (ii) the Brāhmaṇa भारद्वाज i. e. द्रोण (कुरुभिः). द्रोण was the second general of the Kauravās during the Great Mahābhārata war the first being भीष्म. भारद्वाजाः ये द्विजाः तैः उपसेवितैः (पादपैः) भारद्वाजः द्रोणः द्विजः तेन उपसेवितैः (कुरुभिः). He was the preceptor of both the Kauravās and the Pāṇḍavas and taught them the difficult art of archery. महासमर etc. like the start of great battles with (i) bees (शिलीमुख) attracted by (the fragrance of) पुष्पाग trees (पादपैः) (ii) arrows (शिलीमुख) drawn by the best of men (पुष्पाग-पुंसु नागाः); the word नाग indicates श्रेष्ठत्व. The following stanza enumerates the words which when added to नर, पुरुष etc. indicate श्रेष्ठत्व. स्युस्तरपदे व्याघ्रपुङ्गवृषभकुञ्जराः । सिंहशार्ङ्गलनागाद्याः पुंसि श्रेष्ठार्थगोचराः ॥ महाकरिभिः etc. like huge elephants, the trees touched the surface of the earth (भूतल) with newly arisen leaves hanging. The elephants touch the ground with their long sprout-like tails. प्रलम्बबाह्व etc. प्रलम्बाः ये बालपल्लवाः तैः स्पृष्टं भूतलं यैः (पादपैः); प्रलम्बाः ये बालपल्लवाः तैः स्पृष्टं etc. (महाकरिभिः). The reference to chowries in the ears of elephants

(बालपल्लव) as understood by some in this sentence is a mistake. अप्रमत्त etc. like dutiful (not intoxicated) (अप्रमत्त) Kings, the trees had on the outskirts several bushes (गुल्मक) (ii) wary monarchs have many detachments (गुल्मक) on the boundary lines (पर्यन्त) पर्यन्ते अवस्थिताः बहवः गुल्मकाः गुच्छकाः येषु तैः (पादपैः); पर्यन्ते बहवः गुल्मकाः सेनाविशेषाः etc. गुल्मकं is a technical term meaning a division of an army consisting of 45 foot soldiers (पदाति) 27 members of cavalry, 9 chariots and 9 elephants. दंशितैरिव etc. which like mailed persons had their bodies covered with armours in the form of bees; bees and armours are black in colour. भ्रमर can also be taken to mean the nails of the armours 'दंशिते वर्मितः सज्जः।' भ्रमराणां संघातः एव कवचं येषां तैः (पादपैः) ०संघातवत् कवचानि तैः (दंशितैः). प्रमाणाभिमुखैः etc. like persons about (अभिमुख) to weigh (प्रमाण) with (i) Gunja berries touched by monkeys (वानर) with their fingers (अंगुलि) (पादपैः) (ii) with गुञ्ज (a small weight) touched by men (नर) with fingers. In this case we have to separate the expression as वा नर. वानरैः कराङ्गुलिभिः स्पृष्टाः गुञ्जाः येषु (पादपेषु); नराङ्गुलिभिः स्पृष्टाः गुञ्जाः यत्र (०मुखैः) (वेति विकल्पार्थ). In weighing gold or silver, which is very costly, even a small difference in weight costs much and therefore even गुञ्ज are used. Cf. कादंबरीपदार्थदर्पण "अन्यत्र वानरा इति वाद्यवादका उच्यन्ते गुञ्जा वाद्यभाण्डं 'गुञ्जा भाण्डेपि वादके' इति वैजयन्ती।" अवनिपाल etc. like the beds of kings (अवनिपाल) (i) with surfaces (underneath) marked with the foot-prints of lion (पादपैः) (ii) with pedestals shaped like lion's foot (सिंहपादैः चिन्हितानि तस्तलानि येषां तैः) आरब्ध-etc. like persons who have begun the पञ्चतपस् penance (i) surrounded by groups of peacocks (शिखिन्) with crests raised up (पादपैः) (ii) surrounded by fires (शिखिन्) with flames rising up (उच्छिख) उच्छिखं यच्छिखिमण्डलं मयूरसमूहः तेन परिवृतैः (पादपैः); ऊर्ध्वं शिखा ज्वाला यस्यैवभूतं शिखिमण्डलं तेन परिवृतैः (०पञ्चक्रियैः). The पञ्चतपःक्रिया consists of the penance of sitting in the middle of four fires with the summer sun blazing right over one's head. cf. हविर्भुजां मेघवतां चतुर्णां मध्ये ललाटं तपसससिः। रघुवंश XIII. 41 and also शुचौ चतुर्णां ज्वलतां हविर्भुजां शुचिस्मिता मध्यनता सुमध्यमा। विजिता नेत्रप्रतिपातिनीं प्रभामनन्यदृष्टिः सवितारमैक्षत ॥ कुमारसंभव-V. 20. तेजस्विमध्ये तेजस्वी दवीयानापि गण्यते। पञ्चमः पञ्चतपस्तपनो जातवेदसाम् ॥ शिशुपालवध II. 51 cf. also मनुस्मृति VI. 33. दीक्षितै etc. like persons initiated for a sacrifice with (i) horns rubbed against them i. e. trees by spotted antelopes (कृष्णसार) (पादपैः) कृतं विहितं कृष्णसारैः सूर्यैः विषाणानां शृङ्गाणां कण्डूयनं येषु तैः (पादपैः); कृतं कृष्णसारविषाणेन कण्डूयनम् यैः (दीक्षितैः) "दीक्षितानाम-यमाचारो यन्मृगविषाणैः कण्डूयनं विधीयते (ii) bodies scratched (कण्डूयन) with the horns of antelopes. कृष्णसार means an antelope cf. कृष्णसारे

दधञ्छुः त्वयि चाधिज्य कर्मुकं । A दीक्षित is forbidden (for the sake of purity) to scratch his body with nails or wood; he is enjoined to use the horns of an antelope (कृष्णसार). जरदृह etc. like old ascetics having fibres (जटाल) जटाः आलवालकाः च तेषां मण्डलं तत् धरन्तीति (पादपैः); जटायुक्ताः ये बालकाः तेषां मण्डलधरैः (मुनिभिः); आलवालकाः (round trenches) (पादपैः); (ii) a number of children बालक with matted hair (जटाल) (मुनिभिः) बालक is to be taken as बालक according to the rule बवयोरभेदः in paranomasia. Vide यमकश्लेषचित्रेषु बवयेर्दलयोर्न भित् । वाग्भट I. 20. Another interpretation is to explain as जटायुक्ता ये बालास्तनंधयाः (young ones) ते एव कमण्डलुधराः कः (water) पानीयसमूहधराः येषु. इन्द्रजालिकैः etc. like jugglers (i) that attract the eyes (ii) that deceive the eyes or dispossess persons of their vision. Herewith end the long list of adjectives of पादप. It is noteworthy how tiresome one feels while wading through this long list of far-fetched comparisons. This is a very serious defect with Bāṇa. कैलासपादस्य at the foot of कैलास-पाद also means a hill at the foot of a mountain. ज्योत्स्नावदात=white like moon light. शूलपाणि=शिव-सिद्धायतन temple of शिव-सिद्धs are semi-divine beings. vide ante.

तच्च पतनोद्धूतैः.....भगवन्तं त्र्यम्बकम्. The main sentence is तच्च (सिद्धायतनं) प्रविश्य अर्धाक्षीत्-भगवन्तं त्र्यम्बकम्. Entering it, he saw Lord Śiva. केतकीगर्भधूलिभिः धवलीक्रियमाणकायः (qualifying Chandrāpīḍā)-whose body (काया) was white with pollen of Ketaki flowers. The pollen of the Ketaki flowers fell upon his body as it was tossed by the wind (पवनोद्धूत). पशुपति=Lord Śiva cf. नृत्यारम्भे हरपशुपतेरार्द्रनागाजिनेच्छाम् मेघदूत I. 36 बलादिव प्रतिपाद्यमानः भस्मव्रतं-as if made to observe perforce the भस्मव्रत. The white pollen of Ketaki that was falling on Chandrāpīḍā's body was like भस्म (holy ash) and the author imagines that he was, as though, besmeared with it. Śiva likes भस्म and his devotees always besmear their bodies with it. आयतनप्रवेशपुण्यैरिव परिगृह्यमाणः-as though, favoured by the merit of the very entrance into the holy sanctuary. Both the pollen and merit (पुण्य) are white and the author fancies that Chandrāpīḍā was favoured (lit. surrounded) by merit. The pollen is represented as पुण्य here. चतुस्तम्भ etc. चत्वारः स्तम्भा अस्या एवंविधायाः स्फटिकस्य (crystal) मण्डपिका (small pavilion) तस्याः तले प्रतिष्ठितम् qualifying त्र्यम्बकम्. All the words in the accusative singular are in apposition to त्र्यम्बकम्. अचिरोद्धूतैः (qualifying मन्दाकिनी

पुण्डरीकैः) plucked afresh. Hence they were wet. दलशिखरगलजलबिन्दुभिः— with drops of water percolating (गलत्) through the edges (शिखर) of their petals (दल). ऊर्ध्वपादितचन्द्रबिम्बदलैरिव that resembled the pieces of the moon's orb cut upwards—the moon is compared to the lotus. Both are white; if the moon is cut upwards she would look like a full blown lotus. As the moon is (supposed to be) full of nectar, she would begin to ooze when cut. “तत्राप्यमृतस्य गलद्विन्दवो भवन्ति ।” The nectar is compared to drops of water. निजाट्टहासावयवैरिव—the petals are compared to Śiva's own (निज) violent or boisterous laughter which is also white. cf. राशीभूतः प्रतिदिनामिव त्र्यम्बकस्याट्टहासः । मेघदूत I. 58. शेषफणाशकलैरिव—like the pieces of the hoods of Śeṣa (serpent); the hoods of Śeṣa are also white. पाञ्चजन्यसहोदरैरिव—(cf. प्रवृद्धमन्द्राम्बुरधीरनादः कृष्णार्ण- वाभ्यर्णचरैकहंसः । मन्दानिलापुरस्कृतं दधानो निध्वानमश्रूयत पाञ्चजन्यः ॥ शिशुपालवध III. 27;) like brothers (सहोदर-समानं उदरं येषां), or uterine relatives of पाञ्चजन्य—conch borne by विष्णु (cf. पाञ्चजन्यं हृषीकेशो सोमदत्तं धनंजयः) भगवद्गीता I. 14. पाञ्चजन्य is also white. क्षीरोदहृदयाकारैः—moulded like the heart of milky ocean which is, of course, white. उपपादित etc.—that produced the illusion (विभ्रम) of pearly crowns (मुकुट) उपपादितः मौक्तिकानां मुकुटविभ्रमः यैः । अमलमुक्ताशिलाघटितलिङ्गम्—whose image (लिङ्ग) was fashioned out of an immaculate pearl stone. अमला या मुक्ताशिला तथा घटितं लिङ्गं यस्य । चराचरगुरुं—Controller of (or who is the object of worship by) the moveables and immoveables (चराचर). अद्राक्षीत् Aorist III person singular of दृश् (पश्य्) to see. The root is technically called दृशिर् being इरित (ending in इर) gets अश् optionally acc. to the सूत्र “इरितो वा” III-i-57. The affix क्स is debarred by the सूत्र ‘न दृशः’ III-i-47. Hence we get the form अद्राक्षीत् ।

The main sentence isतस्य च दक्षिणां मूर्तिमाश्रित्य अभिमुखीमासीनांकन्यकां ददर्श । This long sentence of 74 lines with 87 adjectives qualifying the word ‘कन्यकां’ is one of the best illustrations of Bāṇa's style. Here we have on the one hand an excellent exhibition of Bāṇa's fancy, his beautiful imagery, his brilliant descriptions and power of observation, his unending vocabulary and his tremendous patience. But, on the other hand, we also find here, an indication of Bāṇa's lack of sense of proportion, his utter disregard for the reader's impatience to know more and more about the story, his long drawn references to mythology and his tiresome punning on words. Bāṇa has attempted at more places than one in his prose works (कादम्बरी and हर्षचरित) such long descriptions of one object—cf. for instance in हर्षचरित—description of दर्पशात or of हर्ष or the description of राजकुल and of कादम्बरी in this work. These are richly poetic no doubt; but the uninitiated reader is afraid of being drowned while wading through the abyss of his adjectives. उपरचितब्रह्मासनां sitting in the posture called ब्रह्मासन. ब्रह्मासन is a particular position for profound meditation. अतिविस्तारिणा देहप्रभावितानेन दन्तमयमिव तं प्रदेशं कुर्वतीम्—Transforming the region around into one of ivory by the stream of her far-reaching bodily lustre. Lustre is white and so is ivory. The girl was so lustrous that with her lustre she transformed the region around into one of ivory. सर्वदिङ्मुखप्लावकेन (qualifying देहप्रभावितानेन) that inundated (प्लावक) all quarters. प्रलय etc. प्रलये (doomsday) विप्लुतः यः क्षीरपयोधिः (milk-ocean) तस्य पूरवत् पाण्डुरेण (white) like the floods of the milky ocean over-flooded at the time of the final Deluge; for प्रलय see note Supra. तपोराशि and the देहप्रभा are both white तपोराशिनेव विसर्पता—as though a heap of penance spreading. पादपान्त्रे etc. the देहप्रभावितानेन resembled the stream of Ganges (त्रिस्तोतोजल) because it was white and it flowed in a mass through interstices of the trees. The stream of the Ganges also flows through the पादपान्त्र. त्रिस्तोत Ganges which has three ‘streams’ one in heaven, another on the earth and the third in the nether world. Cf. सा चक्रवाकाङ्गितसैकतायास्त्रिस्तोतसः कान्तिमतीत्य तस्यौ। कुमारसंभव VII. 15. The water of the Ganges is believed to be white. Cf. “गाङ्गमम्बु सितमम्बु यामुनं कज्जलाभमुभयत्र मज्जतः।” सगिरिकाननं (qualifying प्रदेशं) along with its hills and woods. अन्यथैव etc. whitening the Kailāsa over again. Kailāsa is naturally white. She was, as though, whitening it over again. अन्तर्द्रष्टु etc. महाश्वेता was so ‘brilliant’ that when anyone looked at her, her lustre entered his mind through his eyes and made it (mind) white (श्वेतिमान्). We have to supply here तेनैव देहप्रभावितानेन before लोचनपथप्रविष्टेन. लोचनपथप्रविष्टेन qualifies the word देहप्रभावितानेन which is to be understood. अतिधवल etc. अतिधवलया (extremely white) प्रभया परिगतः देहः (यस्याः) तस्य भावः (सा तथा) her body was surrounded by an extremely white lustre. Her limbs could not be discerned. स्फटिक etc., as though, sitting in a crystal (स्फटिक which is white) mansion. स्फटिक, दुरुध are white. विमलचीनांशुकान्तरिता—विमले चीनांशुके (white silk) अन्तरिता (hidden) इव. There is another reading चेलांशुक which is not very appropriate as चेल and अंशुक both mean ‘garment’ and there is no scope for the sense of whiteness; for चीनांशुक [cf. संतानकाकीर्णप्रदापथं तच्चीनांशुकैः कल्पितक-

तुमालम् । कुमारसंभव VII. 3]. आदर्शतलसंक्रान्तामिव—as though, reflected into the surface of a mirror (आदर्श). शरदभ्रपटलतिरस्कृतामिव—as though concealed behind a group of autumnal clouds. The autumnal clouds are white. अपरिस्फुट etc. न परिस्फुटं प्रकटं विभाव्यमानाः अवयवाः यस्याः. Her limbs could not be distinctly scanned as that of a person hidden or screened by something. पञ्चमहाभूत etc. She was, as though, produced out of the quality 'whiteness' (धवलगुणेनेव), leaving aside (अपहाय) the materials necessary for fashioning a (human) body (पञ्चमहाभूत). Human bodies are made up of five primary elements (viz. पृथिवी, अप्, तेजस्, वायु and आकाश). But महाश्वेता's body was, as though, made up of 'whiteness', alone. द्रव्य (defined as समवायिकारणं द्रव्यम् or गुणाश्रयो द्रव्यम्) is the first of the seven पदार्थs of the Vaiśeṣikas, the other six being गुण, कर्म, सामान्य, विशेष, समवाय and अभाव. The द्रव्यs are nine in number viz. पृथिवी (earth) अप् (water) तेजस् (lustre) वायु (wind) आकाश (ether) काल (time) दिक् (quarter) आत्मन् (soul) and मनस् (mind). Bhāṣa has referred to the 1st five द्रव्यs because it is these elements that go to compose a human body. A human body is made up of द्रव्य and never of गुण. But, owing to her sparkling brilliance Mahāśvetā's body seemed to have been fashioned with the गुण (धवलत्व) alone. The गुणs are 24 in number. रूप, रस etc. दक्षाध्वर etc. She had resorted to the worship of Śiva, as though, through fear of being seized by hair (कचग्रह) by some gang of uncouth persons (उद्धतगण), like Dakṣa's sacrificial rite (अध्वरक्रिया) which had also submitted herself to Śiva through fear of being molested by his attendants (गणs etc. and the other). “उद्धताः ये गणाः (मनुष्यवृन्दाः शिवगणाः च) तैः यः कचग्रहः तस्माद् यद् भयं तेन उपसेवितः त्र्यम्बकः यया । दक्षप्रजापतिना अध्वर ईश्वरो नाहूतः । तेन गणाः प्रेषिताः तैरध्वरविनाशः कृत इति पुराणप्रसिद्धम् ।” कचग्रह seizing by hair and molesting. रतिमिव etc. रति resorted to हराराधान as मदन (her husband) was burnt to death. महाश्वेता also was indulging in हराराधन with a view to annihilate the pangs caused by smearing passion “मदनेन कंदर्पेण पीडितः देहः तन्निमित्तम् । मदनः तस्य उपशान्त्यर्थम् ; साच हरप्रसन्नतायां स्यादित्याह This clause is connected differently with कन्यका. मदनस्य देहः इव देहः यस्य स पुण्डरीकमुनिः तन्निमित्तम् ।” We doubt the propriety of this interpretation for पुण्डरीक is not at all introduced to the reader as yet and hence a reference to पुण्डरीक is certainly pre-mature. It is unlikely that Bhāṣa had intended it here. क्षीरोदधिदेवता etc. attracted (आकृष्टा) by her longing (उत्कण्ठा) to see Śiva's crescent moon (चन्द्रलेखा) familiar to her owing to the common abode i. e. the temple. It is well-known that Śiva has the चन्द्रलेखा on his forehead. It was this that she was adoring; again, the चन्द्रलेखा was familiar to her because the moon was her कुलदेवत. Cf. सोममयूखसंभवमप्सरसां कुलं below. Taken with the presiding Deity of the milky ocean (क्षीरोदधिदेवता) the expression सहवास etc. means—'who was also attracted through her eagerness (to see) the crescent moon familiar to her due to common abode viz. the ocean'. Before the milky ocean was churned by the gods and demons, चन्द्रलेखा used to reside in the ocean and that is why क्षीरोदधिदेवता was well-acquainted with her. क्षीरोदधिदेवता refers to Lakṣmī and not to the presiding deity of the ocean. For other objects which were churned out of the ocean Vide

इन्दुमूर्ति etc. Both महाश्वेता and the disc of the moon were स्वर्भानुभय etc. (i) (with महाश्वेता) retired into the temple of Śiva (त्रिनयन) being oppressed by the heat of the sun (स्वर्भानु) (ii) (with the disc of the moon) resorted to Lord Śiva (त्रिनयनशरण) through fear of Rāhu (स्वर्भानु). It is well known that the moon is afraid of राहु who threatens to swallow her at the time of lunar eclipse. The genealogy of the pauranic concept of राहु and केतु goes back to the vedic age where स्वर्भानु—an असुर—is represented as striking the sun with darkness. Soma and Rudra remove the evil that had befallen the sun. Cf. Rv. V. 40-39 and शतपथब्राह्मण VIII. 2 also तैत्तिरीयसंहिता 1-2. 2. स्वर्गते यो भानुः सूर्यः तस्य आतपलक्षणं भयं तस्मात् कृतं त्रिनयनशरणगमनम् (महाश्वेतया) । स्वर्भानुः सैंहि केयः राहुः तस्माद् यद्वयं तेन कृतं etc. (इन्दुमूर्तिः). त्रिनयन=त्रीणि नयनानि यस्य= (शिव) who has a third eye on the forehead; that is why he is called विरूपाक्ष. ऐरावत etc.—Both महाश्वेता and ऐरावतदेहच्छवि (skin of ऐरावत i. e. सुरैश्वरगज mentioned above) had a common property viz., गजजिनावगुण्ठनो-ल्लिखितशितिकण्ठ etc.—(i) (with महाश्वेता) who had come there (उपगतां) contemplating (चिन्तित) on Śiva (शितिकण्ठ) eager to cover his body with the skin of an elephant (ii) (with ऐरावतदेहच्छवि) that offered itself to Śiva (शितिकण्ठ) when he longed for the elephant's hide to cover his body. अजिन=skin. Cf. 'अजिनं चर्म कृतिः स्त्री.' अमर । The common property is as usual far fetched and that is शितिकण्ठचिन्तितोपनतत्व. Lord Śiva has a longing for गजजिन—skin of an elephant. When he killed the गजासुर he danced flourishing the spread all over the seven worlds. (भूः भुवः स्वः महः जनः तपः and सत्य) and the fame got tired through its wandering and was resting there in the form of महाश्वेता. She was also white and pure like the fame and hence the fancy. त्रयीमिव etc. कलियुगे ध्वस्तः धर्मः तस्माद् यः शोकः तेन गृहीतः वनवासः यया. प्रजापति--an epithet of the ten lords of created beings first created by Brahmā. cf. मनुस्मृति I. 34. युगs are four in number कृत, त्रेता, द्वापर and कलि; the length of these yugas regularly descends and indicates a corresponding physical and moral deterioration of the people, living in them. The four युगs together form one महायुग which consists of 4320,000 human years! Here महाश्वेता is compared to त्रयी the vedic triad (ऋग्वेद, यजुर्वेद and सामवेद). महाश्वेता resorted to forest life (वनवास); the poet imagines that she was त्रयी incarnate who was residing in the forest being aggrieved at the disappearance (ध्वस्त) of Piety (धर्म) during the Kali Age. We are living in the Kali age during which piety has not got enough scope. Kaliyuga is full of knaves and rascals and poor त्रयी (which preaches piety) resorts to वनवास. Here is a reference to the three vedas and not to the fourth viz., the Atharvaveda which is जारणमारणमन्त्रात्मक. People are धर्मनिष्ठ in the First-Age but their deterioration begins with the advent of the next Age and culminates during the कलि Age. After this again comes the कृत Age. This leads Bāṇa to get another fancy. viz. आगामिकृतयुगबीजकलामिव etc. महाश्वेता, was, as though, the germ (बीजकला) to fashion the coming कृतयुग. The कृतयुग is known for its righteousness par excellence. The germ that fashions such a युग must be equally good. Mahāśwetā was holy and pure. Hence Bāṇa fancies that she was, as though, the germ for fashioning out the future Golden Age. अमरगजवीथि etc.—Here महाश्वेता is compared to a line of celestial elephants (whiteness and holiness are the common properties). She was, as though, the array of divine elephants fallen on earth while speedily marching towards the milky way (अन्नगंगा). For elephants marching through the milky way cf. नदत्याकाशगङ्गायाः स्रोतस्युद्गमदिग्गजे। रघुवंश I. 14; elephants, again, are very fond of a plunge into a river. कैलास etc. महाश्वेता was like the grandeur of Kailāsa mountain fallen down being agitated by रावण. The कैलासश्री is white like महाश्वेता. Rāvaṇa once uplifted the Kailāsa mountain and Śiva pressed it so hard that his fingers were crushed. श्वेतदीप etc. Here महाश्वेता is compared to the glory of the 'white Island' that glory (which is white) was, as though, residing in another country (अन्यद्वीप) (in the form of महाश्वेता) as she was curious to see other lands.

गजामुर's wet skin and so he always likes गजाजिन at the time of ताण्डवनृत्य. Cf. नृत्यारम्भे हर पशुपतेराद्रिनागाजिनेच्छाम् । मेघदूत I-36. and also विभूषणोद्वासि पिञ्जद्वभोगि वा गजाजिनालम्बि दुकूलधारि वा । कुमारसंभव V. 78. गजाजिनावगुण्ठनोल्कण्ठितेश्वरस्य चिन्तितेन उपनतां प्राप्ताम्; गजाजिनेन अवगुण्ठनं तस्मिन्नेकोल्कण्ठितः यः शितिकण्ठः तस्य चिन्तितं उपनतं पूरितं यया सा । शितिकण्ठ—is Śiva. His throat had become dark owing to the swallowing of the हालाहल. पशुपति etc. like the splendour of the smile of Śiva's southern face come out and residing there. Both महाश्वेता and शिव's laugh are white (Cf. तस्य च दक्षिणां मूर्तिमाश्रित्याभिमुखीमासीनां etc. above). Reference to दक्षिणमुख is appropriate because महाश्वेता was facing the southern face of Śiva. शरीरिणीमिव etc. महाश्वेता was holy, white and pure like the ashes (भूति) used by Śiva (रुद्र) for besmearing (उद्धूलन). Mahāśwetā was as it were the besmearing ashes of Rudra incarnate. आविर्भूतां etc. Both महाश्वेता and ज्योत्स्ना (moon-shine) (i) are brilliant (ii) they resort to Lord Śiva and (iii) are capable of dissipating the darkness (lit. blackness) (near his throat). Śiva's throat is dark because of the poison he drank; that is why he is called शितिकण्ठ. हरकण्ठे यः अन्धकारः तस्य विघटनं दूरीकरणं तत्र य उद्यमः तेन प्राप्ताम् । गौरीमनःशुद्धि etc. महाश्वेता was, as though, the serenity of पार्वती (गौरी) incarnate. कृतः देहस्य परिग्रहः यया. कार्तिकेय etc. महाश्वेता was, as though, the physical embodiment of the vows of कार्तिकेय in his young age. महाश्वेता was also quite young. (अष्टादशवर्षदेशीयां कन्यकां ददर्श). गिरीशवृषभ etc. महाश्वेता was पृथगवस्थित sitting away and not clinging to the Lord's body. Śiva's Bull (गिरीशवृषभ i. e. नंदी) also stands at the gate and not near Him. आयतन etc. महाश्वेता volunteered to worship Śiva (शंकराभ्यर्चना-य स्वयमुद्यता) like the flowers in the temple-yard that fell on Śiva's head of themselves. Nobody asked महाश्वेता to propitiate the lord and the flowers also were not felled by any one. The common property is voluntary service. In the clauses अघ्नवरक्रिया etc. down to आयतन etc. there is a reference to one or the other thing associated with Lord Śiva which reference is not without its significance since महाश्वेता had repaired to the worship of Śiva. पितामह etc. She was, as though, the consummation of Brahma's austerities (पितामहतपःसिद्धि) in bodily form. This indicates that dreams of the creator to create a perfect human being bore fruit in महाश्वेता. What an exaggeration! Only Bāṇa is capable of such tall talks! आदियुग etc. like the fame of the प्रजापति in the first age (आदियुग) resting on account of the fatigue of wandering through the seven worlds. The आदियुगप्रजापति are मरीचि and others. They were so famous for their creation that their fame (incarnate)

श्वेतद्वीप is the name of one of the eighteen minor divisions of the known continent. काशकुसुम etc. She was, as though, the loveliness of काश flower awaiting the advent of autumn. The काश flower is more abundant after the rainy season cf. निवृत्तपर्जन्यजलाभिषेका प्रफुल्लकाशा वसुधेव रंजे । कुमारसंभव VII. शरच्छशशंकौरेण वाताविद्धेन भामिनी । काशपुष्पलवनेन साश्रुपातं मुखं मम ॥ स्वप्नवासवदत्तम् IV Act. उदीक्षमाण = waiting for. शेषशरीर etc. महाश्वेता was white like the brilliance of Śeṣa's body which came up having relinquished the infernal region (रसातल). Śeṣa is the name of a celebrated serpent said to have one thousand heads and represented as forming the couch of विष्णु or (and) supporting the entire world. Cf. किं शेषस्य भरव्यथा वपुषि क्षमां न क्षिपत्येष यत् । मुद्राराक्षस II. 8 मुसलायुध etc. or like the lustre of बलराम's (मुसलायुध) body dropping down when exhausted through the intoxication of wine. (मधोः मदः तस्य विधूर्णनमेव आयासः i. e. fatigue). Balarāma, the elder brother of Lord Kṛiṣṇa was fair. He was very much addicted to drinking. Cf. उदयनवेन्दुसवर्णावासवदत्ताबलौ बलस्य त्वां । पद्मावतीर्णपूर्णौ वसन्तकन्नौ भुजौ पाताम् । स्वप्नवासवदत्तम् I. Other synonyms of मुसलायुध are मुसली, हली, हलायुध, सीरपाली, बल, बलदेव, बलभद्र. The pestle and the ploughshare are the commonest weapons of बलराम. He is also spoken of as an adept in the art of wielding the mace. शुक्लपक्ष etc. महाश्वेता was, as though, a number of शुक्लपक्षs collected together. शुक्लपक्षs are bright and महाश्वेता was their collection. Here Bāṇa has committed a slight error. All the nights in a शुक्लपक्ष are not bright while all the nights in कृष्णपक्ष are not dark. He could have better given the idea by saying that महाश्वेता was a collection of all full-moon nights. सर्वहंसैरिव etc. swans are white. Every one of them had, as though, given a share of its whiteness to her. धर्महृदयादिव with this begins the list of several things known or supposed to be possessed of a white colour. Mahāśwetā is said to have been produced out of the heart of धर्म. Mahāśwetā had shared the whiteness with swan birds कृतः संविभागः ययो । दन्तदलैरिव घटिताम्—as though fashioned with the flakes of ivory. Ivory is white and so was महाश्वेता. इन्दुकरकूर्चक etc.—इन्दोः कराः (rays) एव कूर्चकाः (brushes). वर्णसुधा=lime or chunam. Note to what an absurdity Bāṇa had been carried away in the heat of his fancy. अमृतफेनपिण्ड = mass of ambrosial (अमृत) foam (फेन) पारदरस=mercury or quick silver. Cf. निदर्शनं पारदोऽरसत्रः । भामिनीविलास I. 82. कुटजकुन्दसिन्दुवारकुसुमच्छविभिः—कुटजकुन्दसिन्दुवारकुसुमानां छविभिः—कुटज etc. are names of flowers; all are white in colour and hence the comparison. ह्यत्ता—limit. VI. 17 स्कन्धावलम्बिभिः—[This and other clauses following in instrumental plural qualify the word जटाभिः] hanging on her shoulders.

उदयतटगताद् अर्कबिम्बादुद्भूत्य—as though made up of the splendour of the rays picked up from the solar disc (अर्कबिम्ब) on the top of the rising mountain (उदयतट). The rays of the morning sun are reddish, pleasant and long and so were the जटाः. उदयतट=eastern mountain behind which the moon, sun etc. are supposed to rise. उन्मिषत्तडित्तरलतेजस्ताम्राभिः—उन्मिषन्ती (flashing) या तडित् (lightning) तस्याः तरलं तेजः तद्वत् ताम्राभिः tawny like the flickering lustre of the flashing lightning. अचिरं etc अचिरं यत् ज्ञानं तस्माद् अवस्थिता विरलाः ये वारिकणाः (drops of water) तेषां भावः तथा. प्रणामं etc. प्रणाम-क्रियायां (obeisance) लग्नं यत् पशुपतेः (Śiva) चरणभस्म तस्य चूर्णाभिः (particles). The poet imagines that Mahāśwetā at the time of obeisance touched Śiva's feet with her forehead and therefore the particles of holy ashes tinged the hair. What had, in fact, happened was that there were drops of water on her जटाः due to recent bath and they appeared like भस्म. The watery drops appear like particles of ashes. उन्नासितः शिरोभागः यस्याः. जटापाश etc. The idea is that महाश्वेता had entwined in her matted hair the bejewelled feet of Śiva (पादुका) bearing the lord's name. “ भक्तिविशेषप्रकटनार्थं ईश्वरचरणद्वयं शिरसोद्वहन्तीम् ”—The devotees of Śiva place the lord's पादुका on their heads to express their great devotion for the God. In the case of महाश्वेता the पादुका were made of jewel. नामाङ्क etc. with (lord's) name engraved on them. रविरथ etc. This is a very bold idea. महाश्वेता was wearing holy ash (भस्म) on her fore-head. The poet imagines that the holy ash was white like the several constellations (नक्षत्र) pounded (क्षोद) by the hoofs (खुर) of the horses of the sun's chariot. The sun is supposed to traverse the sky in a chariot to which seven white horses are yoked. The नक्षत्रs are white and hence their powder would also be white. रवेः रथस्य ये तुरगाः तेषां खुराः तेः क्षुण्णानि चूर्णितानि नक्षत्राणि तेषां क्षोदः (powder) तद्वद्विशदेन । शिखर etc. resembling the side (मेखला) of हिमालय (शैलराज) with the crescent moon (शशाङ्ककला) touching a rock at its top. The idea is far fetched. महाश्वेता was like a slope of the हिमालय which is white. Her face resembled the rock on its top and the ललाटपट्टिका with which her forehead was adorned, appeared like the crescent moon (touching it). शिखरशिखायां श्लिष्टा या शशाङ्ककला यस्याम् । अतुल etc. महाश्वेता's gaze (which was fixed on Śiva) is compared to another garland of lotuses (पुण्डरीकमाला). भूतज्ञाय = lord Śiva. अतुला या भक्तिः तथा प्रसाधितया प्रसन्नया । The eyes are often compared to lotuses ; as her eyes were fixed, they appeared like a string of lotuses. अपरया—the lord was already worshipped with one garland of lotuses. Her eyes formed another. अनवरतगीतपरिस्फुरिताधरपुटवशाद् etc.—अतिशुचिभिः

(qualifying दशनांशुभिः rays from teeth) अनवरतं यद् गीतं तेन परिस्फुरितं यद् अक्षरस्य पुटं तद्वशाद्). This is to be connected with मुखात्. स्नपयन्तीम् is the accusative singular of स्नपयन्ती present participle of the causal of स्ना to bathe. Note पुनरिव—she was, as though, bathing again (the lord). All the words in instrumental plural qualify दशनांशुभिः. The rays proceeding from her teeth are pure like water and hence she was, as though, bathing lord Śiva over again. The brilliance of her innocent heart, the excellence of the song, the musical notes, the words of her panegyric are all supposed to be white. अतिविमलैश्च etc. qualify मुक्ताफलैः (pearls). वेदार्थैरिव like the sense of the Vedas extracted from the mouth of lord Brahmā. The Vedas are believed to have been promulgated from the four mouths of Brahmā; the pearls were like the meaning of the Vedas expounded by Brahmā himself. This is certainly an overdrawn fancy. गायत्रीवर्ण—The letters of गायत्री. The famous मन्त्र that every Brahmin recites every morning and evening at the time of संध्या adorations-तत्सवितुर्वरेण्यं भर्गो देवस्य धीमहि । धियो यो नः प्रचोदयात् is the text of the मन्त्र. ग्रथनतामुपगतैः—strung together; there are other readings also ग्रथनमुपगतैः and ग्रथन विमुलतामुपगतैः which give the idea more clearly. नारायणनाभिपुण्डरीक-बीजैः—the seeds (बीज) collected from the lotus of the navel of Viṣṇu. This lotus gave birth to Brahmā; the creator नारायण—विष्णु. He is called नारायण because his abode is water (नारा अयनं यस्य). सप्तर्षिभिरिव करस्पृशं पृतमात्मानमिच्छन्निः The pearls are compared to सप्तर्षि the seven sages. They were, as though, desirous of being purified (पृत) by the touch of महाश्वेता's hands. The list of the सप्तर्षि is differently given by different writers.

मरीचिराङ्गिरा अत्रिः पुलस्त्यः पुलहः क्रतुः ।

वसिष्ठश्चेति सप्तैते ज्ञेयाश्चित्रशिखण्डिनः ॥

तारकारूपेणागतैः—assuming the form of stars. It is not clear why the सप्तर्षि should have come in the form of तारकाः. The सप्तर्षि are themselves stars in the sky and they are compared to the pearls. The pearls appear like stars. आमलकी etc. as broad as the आमलकी fruit

(myrobalam आंवला in Marathi). The student may find it strange that महाश्वेता an ascetic woman, leading a forest-life should use a necklace of very costly pearls as her rosary. As the story proceeds he would learn that there is a romantic association behind this अक्षमाला. It was that necklace which she had given to Puṇḍarika (her lover) in place of his rosary, which he carried as a memento. Cf. “तामेवाक्षमालां गृहीत्वा” etc. below. परिवेष-परिगतचन्द्रमण्डल (like the fullmoon night), ‘With the moon’s orb (चन्द्रमण्डल) encircled with a halo’. महाश्वेता was like a full moon night as she was lustrous and her face resembled the full moon and the अक्षवलय (which she had put on round her neck), is represented as the halo (परिवेष). परिवेषेण परिगतं चन्द्रमण्डलं यस्याम् । अधोमुख etc. qualifies स्तनयुगलेन (pair of breasts) having the shape of circular shells (कपाल) on Śiva’s head (हरशिर) with the face downwards. The two breasts of महाश्वेता were round and big and therefore looked like skulls on Śiva’s head. When the head is turned, the skulls would just appear like her protruding breasts. The commentary in the निर्णयसागर explains ऊर्ध्वमुखे कपाले श्यामता नास्ति, इत्यतोऽधोमुखं यद् हरशिरःकपालं तद्वत् मण्डलाकारेण वर्तुलाकृतिना । हरपददनेन स्तने धवलत्वं द्योत्यते । ईश्वरस्य धवलत्वात् । This is not sound because here हरशिरःकपाल is equal to the skull of शिव’s head. Kane rightly remarks “This explanation besides being profane as comparing her breast to the head of Śiva himself, is far-fetched and out of keeping with the context.” The commentaries आमोद and कादम्बरीपदार्यदर्पण take हरशिरःकपाल as the skull of ब्रह्मा on the head of Śiva. मोक्षद्वारकलशकान्तिना—lovely as the pitchers at the entrance-gate to mokṣa. Mahāśvetā was about to acquire मोक्ष by her strict religious observance. This was foreshadowed by her bosoms resembling the pitchers placed at the door. Pitchers filled with water and placed at the entrance gate of a house are regarded as auspicious. Cf. मणिमयमङ्गलकलशयुगलाश्चान्येन.....द्वारदेशेन विराजमानं.....सूतिकागृहमपश्यत् । सूतिकागृहवर्णनम् । एकहंस etc. Here the breasts are compared to a pair of हंसs. Both are white. महाश्वेता was as brilliant as the river Ganges and hence she with her breasts appeared like the river Ganges with a single pair of swans sporting in its water. The next adjective is कल्पतरुलतावल्कलेन कृतोत्तरीयाम्—who used, as an upper garment, the bark of a branch of a desire-yielding tree. लता has to be taken in the sense of a branch. The वल्कल of a creeper (लता) on the tree would not give the idea of sanctity as the “branch” of desire-yielding tree would give. कल्पतरुs—trees that yield whatever he desires to a person sitting under them. Cf. नाबुद्धकल्पद्रुमतां विहाय जातं तस्मात्तन्मन्यसिपत्रवृक्षपत्रम् । रघुवंश XVI. 18. The word also means trees of Indra's paradise Cf. अनुकूल्य-तीन्द्रोऽपि कल्पद्रुमविशेषणैः । कुमारसंभव II. 39. देवतरू are five in number मन्दार, पारिजात, कल्प, हरिचन्दन and संतान. गौरी etc. The upper garment was, as though, made up of the name of पार्वती's lion. Both the mane and the वल्कल were white. चामर etc. made of the hair of the deer's tail. चामरस्य आकृतिः इव मनोहरा आकृतिः यस्य । कृतं उत्तरीयस्य कृत्यं कार्यं यस्याः—the bark-garment served the purpose of an upper vesture. स्तनयुगल etc. स्तनयुगलस्य मध्ये निबद्धा ग्रन्थिः यस्याः, अयुग्मलोचन etc. The next adjective is ब्रह्मसूत्रेण पवित्रीकृतकायाम्. Brahmasutra is the sacred thread. Note that महाश्वेता though a woman was wearing a यज्ञोपवीत as she was a तपस्विनी. चूडामणिचन्द्रमयूखजालेनैव—which was like a collection of rays of the moon on Śiva's crest which i. e. rays were received as a favour from अयुग्मलोचन—one having not two eyes i. e. शिव. It is well known that Lord Śiva has three eyes and not a pair of eyes. The यज्ञोपवीत that purified her person was white like rays of the moon. Śiva wears the moon as his crest-jewel. The poet, thereupon, fancies that the sacred thread was nothing short of the circle of the moon's rays which Mahāśwetā had received as a mark of favour for her profound devotion, from Lord Śiva himself. पवित्रीकृतः कायः यस्याः. आप्रपदीनेन etc. The next adjective is दुक्कलपटेन प्रावृतनितम्बाम् whose buttock was covered with a silk garment. It was आप्रपदीन—reaching as far as her feet. बालबोधिनी says—आप्रपदीनेन पदतल-पर्यन्तव्यापकेन । पादस्याग्रं प्रपदं तन्मर्यादीकृत्य आप्रपदं, आप्रपदं प्राप्नोति इति आप्रपदीनं. This is a मत्वर्थीय formed according to the सूत्र आप्रपदं प्राप्नोति V-ii-8 सि. कौ. 1809 affixing खञ् (ईन) after the word आप्रपदं in the sense of reaching thereto. आप्रपदं is an अव्ययीभाव compound formed by the सूत्र II-1-13 सि. कौ. 667 “स्यास्त्रिवाप्रपदीनं तत् प्राप्नोत्याप्रपदं हि यत् ।” इत्यमरः ॥ स्वभावसितेनापि—though naturally white. ब्रह्मासन etc. ब्रह्मासनस्य यः बन्धः तेन उत्तानं (upturned) यत् चरणतलं तस्य प्रभायाः (lustre) परिष्वङ्गात् (contact); it became red (लोहितायमान) on account of the rays coming from the feet that were turned red. ब्रह्मासन is one of the several यौगिक आसना like पद्मासन, वीरासन etc. Mahāśwetā was sitting in the ब्रह्मासन posture (“उपरचितब्रह्मासनाम्” above). In this position the soles of her feet were upturned. They were red and hence the rays proceeding from them were also red. As the silken garment came in contact with the प्रभा of these soles of her feet, it was reddened though it was naturally white. This can be an illustration of the figure of speech called तद्गुण. यौवनेनापि etc. The adjective is यौवनेनापि...उपास्यमानां she was, as though, attended upon by youth which came in due course (स्वकालोपसर्पिणा) and which was innocent and well restrained (विनीत).—महाश्वेता was innocent and restrained—and therefore like a disciple who also approaches his preceptor at the proper time and is innocent and well restrained. लावण्येनापि etc. Gracefulness itself, as though, encircled her. But to get this opportunity gracefulness had to earn some merit and hence it is called कृतपुण्य. कृतपुण्य also means 'one who has acquired merit'. This कृतपुण्य is also स्वच्छात्मन् (of a pure heart). लावण्य approached her like a कृतपुण्य. Looking to the context this explanation is to be preferred. What an idea! रूपेणापि etc. Beauty with charming eyes (रुचिरलोचन) served her, like a domestic deer (आयतनमृग) with fickleness gone (विगतचापल) or free from restiveness. Here रूप is called विगतचापल which is not very appropriate. The next adjective is उत्संगगतां वीणां आस्फलयन्तीम्—playing on a lute that was placed on the lap at the time of playing. Cf. उत्संगे वा मलिनवसने सौम्य निक्षिप्य वीणां मद्गात्राकं विरचितपदं गेयमुद्रातुकामा ॥ मेघदूत II. 23 स्वसुतां इव—like her own daughter. सूक्ष्मशङ्खखण्डिकाङ्गुलीयकपुरिताङ्गुलिना सूक्ष्माः याः शङ्खखण्डिकाः (pieces of shell) तेषां यानि अङ्गुलीयकानि (ringlets) तैः आपूरिताः अङ्गुलयः यस्य (qualifying दक्षिणकरेण—right hand). त्रिपुण्ड्रका-वशेषभस्मपाण्डुरेण—white (पाण्डुर) on account of the holy ash (भस्म) that was left (thereon i. e. on the hand) after wearing the त्रिपुण्ड्रक mark i. e. a mark on the forehead consisting of three lines made with cow-dung ashes or sandal. Cf. वक्राः ललाटगास्तिष्ठो भस्मरेखा त्रिपुण्ड्रकम् । The idea is that the hand was white on account of ash that was used for wearing the त्रिपुण्ड्रक mark. त्रिपुण्ड्रकाय अवशिष्टं उर्वरितं यज्ञस्म तेन पाण्डुरेण । प्रकोष्ठबद्धशङ्खखण्डकेन—to the forearm of which were tied (बद्ध) pieces of shell (शङ्खखण्डक). नखमयूखदन्तुरतया—bristling as it was (दन्तुरतया) with rays from the nails (that were so brilliant). गृहीतदन्तकोणेनेव—as though she held the fiddle-stick of ivory. The rays shooting from her curved nails when she moved her hand to and fro appeared like a bow used when playing upon a lute. The brilliant rays are represented as fiddle-stick of ivory. दन्तमयीम् adjective of वीणा—made of ivory. The next adjective is प्रत्यक्षामिव...गन्धर्वविद्यां...उपेताम्—गन्धर्वविद्या=Science, of music. गन्धर्वाः were celestial musicians, a class of demigods regarded as the singers or musicians of gods and said to give good and agreeable voice to girls. Cf. सोमं शौचं ददावासां गन्धर्वश्च शुभा गिरम् । याज्ञवल्क्य I; मणिमण्डपिका etc. (qualifies सहचरीभिरिव सवीणाभिः प्रतिमाभिः)—her own reflections appeared like companions with lutes in their hands. मणिमण्डपिकायाः (jewelled pavillion) स्तम्भेषु (pillars) लग्नाभिः आत्मानुरूपाभिः—worthy of herself. She with the lute in her hand was reflected in the pillars of the bejewelled मण्डपिका. These reflections are fancied as her worthy associates or companionous with lutes in hand. Some read विलासवतीभिः (sportive) before प्रतिमाभिः. The next adjective is हृदयमिव प्रविष्टां हरस्य—who had, as though, entered the heart of Śiva whom she had propitiated by her uncommon devotion. (अति...भक्त्या आराधित) As the image of Śiva was wet, her body was reflected in it and so it appeared that she entered Śiva's heart. स्नपनेन (bath) आर्द्रं यत् लिंगं तस्मिन् संक्रान्तं प्रतिबिम्बं तत्तया; गीत्या देवं विरूपाक्षं उपवीणयन्तीम् singing a panegyric in honour of Lord Śiva—विरूपाक्षं=शिव one who has a विरूप (विगतं रूपं यस्मात्) eye. It is a well known fact that the Lord has three eyes, cf. वपुर्विरूपाक्षमलक्ष्यजन्मता दिगम्बरावेकनिवेदितं वसु। कुमारसंभव V. 72. also या नः प्रीतिर्विरूपाक्ष त्वदनुध्यानसंभवा। ibid VI. 21. and also दशा दग्धं मनसिजं जीवयन्ति दशैव याः विरूपाक्षस्य जयिनीस्तास्तुवे वामलोचनाः ॥ उपवीणयन्तीं-स्तुवन्तीम्—This is formed by affixing 'णिच्' according to the सूत्र सत्यापपाशरूपवीणात्लृक्श्लोकसेनालोमत्वच्-चूर्णचुरादिगभ्यो णिच् III-i-25 सि. कौ. 2563—singing to the accompaniment of. हारलेखयेव etc. are adjectives of गीत्या; which issued from her throat (प्रासकण्ठयोग्या) like a necklace (which is also worn round the neck or throat). The common property (साधारणधर्म) is प्रासकण्ठयोगत्व. Similarly, which had a refrain (ध्रुव) like a series of planets associated with the polar star (ध्रुव). The pun rests on the word ध्रुव which means (i) refrain of a song and (ii) the ध्रुव star or North Pole. For the first sense cf. stanzas in गीतगोविन्द; every one of them has भज गोविन्दं भज गोविन्दं as refrain. For the second sense Cf. शरत्पञ्चमैर्ज्योतिर्भिर्विभावय इव ध्रुवम्। रघुवंश XVII 35 and also ध्रुवेणभर्त्रा ध्रुवदर्शनाय प्रयुज्यमाना म्रियदर्शनेन। सा इष्ट इत्यानन-मुन्नमस्य हीसन्नकण्ठी कथमप्युवाच ॥ कुमारसंभव VII. 85. The word has several other meanings also i.e. (i) sure as in जातस्य हि ध्रुवो मृत्युः ध्रुवं जन्म मृतस्य च (ii) unchangeable as in इति ध्रुवेष्चामनुशासती सुताम्। कुड्येव रक्तमुखवर्णया—which was sung in impassioned notes (रक्ताः मुखे i.e. commencement वर्णाः यस्याः) like an angry woman who has also a रक्तकण्ठ red throat on account of wrath. The variant reading रागरक्तमुखवर्णया is to be expanded as रागाः रक्ताः मिश्रिताः मुखे प्रारम्भे वर्णाः यस्याः सा. मत्तयेव घूर्णितमन्द्रतारया—Because the crescendo and the decrescendo (मन्द्रतार) were repeated. An intoxicated woman who is also घूर्णितमन्द्रतारा (through the influence of wine), has eyes dull and pupils moving about. भानुचन्द्र explains:—घूर्णिताः धोलनां प्राप्ताः मन्द्राः—उरःप्रदेशोल्लावाः—ताराः—शिरसमुल्लावाः स्वराः

common property is lustrousness. The reading तेजोमयी is to be preferred to तपोमयीम् । पीतामृतामिव विगततृष्णाम् । who was free from avarice (तृष्णा), like one who had drunk nectar (after which there need be no thirst of any kind); विगता तृष्णा लोभो वा यस्याः ईशानाशिर etc. Who had no passion (अनुपगतः रागः यस्याम्) and therefore was like the digit of the Moon on the head of the Lord Śiva (ईशान), which is also without redness. अमथित etc. Who was placid like the wealth of the waters (जलसंपद्) of the ocean before it was churned. After the churning by gods and demons the ocean was deprived of the 14 jewels (लक्ष्मी कैस्तुभ etc.). The common property is अन्तःप्रसन्नत्व. The ocean was unagitated before it was churned. असमस्त etc. uninfluenced by the pairs (द्वन्द्व) and so like the graceful style in dramatic composition which is free from (द्वन्द्व) compounds. (द्वन्द्व) ('pairs') like सुख दुःख; शीत उष्ण and so on. महाशेता was free from these i.e. she was not influenced by either. She was like a कर्मयोगी described in the भगवद्गीता [सुखदुःखे समे कृत्वा लाभालाभौ जयाजयौ]. A graceful style is also (अद्वन्द्व) free from compounds—असमस्त=समासरहिता असमस्ता, असमासगा, या पदवृत्तिः कौशिक्यादिः—The word वृत्ति has more senses than one (i) The power or force of a word by which it expresses, indicates or suggests a meaning; these are three in all—अभिधा, लक्षणा and व्यंजना (ii) general character of a word. (iii) A style in composition. The sense best applicable here is the 3rd one. How to distinguish रीति from वृत्ति—the former is defined as पदसंघटना रीतिः रङ्गसंस्थाविशेषवत् । उपकर्त्री रसादीनां सा पुनःस्याच्चतुर्विधा ॥ वैदर्भी चाथ गौडी च पांचालीलाटिका तथा S. D. 624–5 the वृत्तिs—are शृङ्गारे कैशिकी वीरे सात्वती, आरभटी तथा रसे रौद्रे च बीभत्से वृत्तिः सर्वत्र भारती ॥ चतस्रो वृत्तयो होता सर्वनाट्यस्य मातृकाः ॥—साहित्यदर्पण VI. 122–3. Kane suggests that the word रीति for वृत्ति would have been better as there is no reference to compounds in any of the descriptions of the four वृत्तिस viz. कैशिकी, भारती, सात्वती, आरभटी. But वृत्ति can be taken as complex formation requiring explanation or solution. बौद्धबुद्धि etc.—independent like the cognition of the Buddhas which is also निरालम्बन (having no substratum). The योगाचारs [which is a school among the Buddhas] believe that there is knowledge without any corresponding existing entity (आलम्बनो विषयहेतुः) All the four schools among the Buddhas (viz. सौत्रान्तिक, वैभाषिक, योगाचार, and माध्यमिक) hold the belief that every thing is momentary—(यत् सत् तत् क्षणिकं or सर्वं क्षणिकं) when a person says “I perceive a thing” there ought to be some object (आलम्बन) which would last for some time. But Buddhas do not believe in this and therefore their cognition is called निरालम्बन. e. g. We see a river but, in fact every moment what we see is a mass of water that was not there a movement before; every movement we see a different mass of water and yet the river is said to be seen; similarly every moment things are created and destroyed and life is a long stream or succession of क्षणिक things; what is permanent is आशय or संतान. For a clearer idea of Buddha's philosophy and its refutation read ब्रह्मसूत्रशांकरभाष्य II 23-32. निरालम्बनामर्थशून्याम् । बौद्धमते अर्थानां घटपटादीनामभावात् । शून्यवादित्वादित्यर्थः । वैदहीमिव प्रासज्योतिःप्रवेशाम्—who had found her way to 'Self-Realisation' like Sītā who entered fire—ज्योतिः—light of Brahman regarded as the supreme spirit. Cf. योऽन्तःसुखोऽन्तरारामस्तथान्तर्ज्योतिरेव यः । स योगी ब्रह्मनिर्वाणं ब्रह्मभूतोऽधिगच्छति ॥ भगवद्गीता V. 24. and also ज्योतिषामपि तज्ज्योतिस्तमसः परमुच्यते । ज्ञानं ज्ञेयं ज्ञानगम्यं हृदि सर्वस्याधिष्ठितम् ॥ Ibid XIII 17. महाश्वेता had obtained entrance into this spiritual vision (प्रासज्योतिःप्रवेशा) through her austerities. Sītā also was प्रासज्योतिःप्रवेशा (ज्योति—fire). After the death of Rāvana, Sītā purified herself by entering fire in the presence of all in order to establish her chastity. For ज्योतिः in the sense of fire cf. न प्रभातरलं ज्योतिः उदेति वसुधातलात् । रघुवंश II. 75 and also उल्लिख्यैनां ज्योतिरेकं जगाम । शाकुन्तल V. 30 and also धूमज्योतिःसलिलमरुतां सीनपातः क मेघः । मेघदूतः I. 5. The common property is प्रासज्योतिःप्रवेशत्व. द्यूतकलाकुशलामिव वशीकृताक्षहृदयाम्—who had restrained her senses (अक्ष) and heart and was like a woman adept in the art of gambling, (who masters the tricks of gambler's trade अक्षहृदय). The pun rests on the word अक्षहृदय. वशीकृतानि अक्षाणि इन्द्रियाणि हृदयं च यया (with Mahāśvetā); वशीकृतं अक्षहृदयं यया (कुशलाम्). वशीकृत etc. is capable of another interpretation when taken with 'कुशलाम्' "वशीकृतं अक्षैः पाशकैः हृदयं यस्याः" । whose heart was subdued by the die. महीमिव जलभृतदेहाम्—living on water (जलभृतदेहा), like the earth which floated in water. महाश्वेता lived on water as she was observing penance. The earth is also जलभृतदेहा as she is said to have been created out of water. cf. तस्माद्वा एतस्मादात्मनः आकाशः संभूतः । आकाशाद्वायुः, वायोरग्निः, अग्नेरापः, अद्भ्यः पृथिवी, पृथिव्या औषधयः औषधीभ्योऽन्नं, अन्नात् पुरुषः । (तैत्तिरीयोपनिषद् chapter dealing with cosmogony). हिमसमयदिन etc who absorbed (परिपीत) the solar heat, like the splendour of the wintry morn which also subdues (परिपीत) the heat of the sun (भास्करातप); महाश्वेता like ascetics was drinking the भास्करातप (Vide above आरब्धपञ्चतपःक्रिया). "तपस्वीनां सूर्यातपग्रहणं महाफलाय" इति श्रुतेः । During the winter, days are short; this fact is metaphorically represented here as the wintry morn drinking or subduing the heat of the sun. आर्यामिव etc. महाश्वेता—possessed the ascetics' wealth (समुपात्तयतिगणोचित.....) and so like आर्या which also possesses appropriate यति and गण. आर्या here means a stanza in general. यति or Casura means the pause that may be made in reciting a quarter of a verse and गण means a syllabic foot. For the sake of convenience sanskrit prosody has fixed that गण should generally consist of three letters, each गण being distinguished from the other by particular syllables whether short or long. The several गण are य, र, त, भ, ज स, म and न. य for instance, has three syllables the first being short (shown as ~) and the other two long (shown as —), र is (— ~ —) long, short and long. The following stanza gives a clear idea of the गण—आदिमध्यावसानेषु य-र-ता यान्ति लाघवम् । भ-ज-सा गौरवं यान्ति मनौ तु गुस्लाघवम् ॥ An Āryā or a stanza contains यति and गण. आर्या does not here mean the 'आर्या' metre which is defined as यस्याः प्रथमे पादे द्वादशमात्रास्तथा तृतीयेऽपि । अष्टादश द्वितीये चतुर्थके पञ्चदश साऽऽर्या ॥” It depends on मात्रा (prosodial or syllabic instants, the time required to pronounce a short vowel) and not on गण and therefore is not 'गणोचित'. आर्या may, therefore, be taken to mean a stanza and not आर्या metre. The commentator explains आर्या as छन्दोविशेषः This is untenable. समुपात्ता यतिगणानां मुनिजनानां योग्या मात्रा यया (महाश्वेता); समुपात्ता यतयः विश्रामाः गणाः मगणादयः तेषां उचिता मात्रा यस्याः (आर्या). Note that with महाश्वेता मात्रा means 'wealth, property', for this sense of मात्रा cf. “शून्यमठिकायां मात्रां न मुंचति” पञ्चतन्त्र; with आर्या, मात्रा means a “prosodial or syllabic instant. आलिखितामिव अचलावस्थानाम्—motionless like one painted in a picture. A woman in a picture is motionless and महाश्वेता was also motionless as she was observing penance. अंशुमयीमिव तनुच्छायानुलिसभूतलाम्—enveloping the surface of the earth (भूतल) with her physical lustre (तनुच्छाया), as if, she were made of rays that also can be described as अनुलिसभूतल. अंशुमयी—a product of rays. निर्ममाम् unattached having no 'ममभाव'. Generally man is attached to this world and looks upon his family and possessions as his own (मम or मे); महाश्वेता was not attached to anything. A man who has (ममत्व) can never be happy cf. अशानं मे वसनं मे जाया मे बन्धुवर्गो मे इति “मे मे” कुर्वाणं कालवृको हन्ति पुरुषाजम् ॥ अमानुषाकृतिम्—अमानुषा आकृतिः यस्याः—of a form superhuman. दिव्यत्वाद् अपरिज्ञायमानवयः—प्रमाणाम्—whose age could not be discerned (अपरिज्ञायमान) or reckoned on account of her divinity. Divine beings are always young (निर्जर) and therefore it is difficult to ascertain their age अपरिज्ञायमानं अनिश्चीयमानं वयः यस्याः । अष्टादशवर्षेदशीयां—of about eighteen winters. To denote slight incompleteness the affixes कल्पक (कल्प) देश्य, देशीयर, (देशीय,) are added according to Sutra (सूत्र) “ईषदसमासौः कल्पदेश्यदेशीयरौ” V. III. 67 सि. कौ. 2022 प्रतिपन्नपाशुपतव्रतां—प्रतिपन्नं पाशुपतस्य (शिवस्य) व्रतं यथा—the vow of the devotee of Śiva.

The following clauses explain how this happens. वृत्तान्तान्तराणि has to be understood as विविधाः वृत्तान्ताः तथाहि—for example यदृच्छया—by chance. तुरंगमुखमिधुन—the horse-faced couple (of Kimaras)—a Mythical being with a human figure and the head of a horse—किन्नरः were the musicians of the gods cf. उद्गास्यतामिच्छतिकिन्नराणां तानप्रदायित्वमिवोपगन्तुम् । कुमारसंभव—I-8. दिव्यजनसंचरणोचितः—fit for the movements of heavenly beings. मानवानामगम्य—untrodden by human beings. सिद्धजनोपस्पृष्टजलं—सिद्धजनैः (semi-divine beings—See above) उपस्पृष्टं जलं यस्य. तीरलेखाविश्रान्तेन (qualifying मया —)—while resting on its bank. संशीतिः संशयसंभूति—possibility (संभव) संभूति is used as meaning both possibility and origin. Note the idiomatic expression. तपस्विजन-दुर्लभद्विव्यरूपाया—तपस्विजनेषु दुर्लभं रूपं यस्याः सा तस्याः । a form unseen among the ascetics. The sages expose their bodies to heat, cold and bodily tortures. They do not, therefore, possess a person as charming as that of the maiden. एवं कृतमतिः—Having resolved thus (कृता मतिः येन) दिवापि रजनीसमयं-दर्शयद्भिः तमालतरुभिरन्धकारितपुरोभागाम्. This and the following seven clauses in the acc. sing. qualify गुहाम्This is an eloquent description of the cave where the maiden had her abode. Whose entrance (पुरोभाग) was darkened by

As the water struck the white rocks, it rebounded and so became foamy. उल्कोटिप्रावटिक्कविपाट्यमानैः उल्कोटयः (with up-turned edges) ये प्रावाणः (rocks, lit, stones) तेषां विटकाः (tops) तैः विपाट्यमानैः (qualifying प्रस्त्रवणैः). The cascades were shattered to pieces by the tops of the sharp edges of rocks and hence branched off into many streams. तुषार-शिशिरशीकरासारैः—showering sprays cool like snow (तुषार) (qualifying प्रस्त्रवणैः) अवशीर्यमाणः तुषारवत् शिशिरः शीकरः तस्य आसारैः or अवशीर्यमाणः तुषारः तस्य शिशिराः शीकराः तेषां आसारैः । As the cascades were flowing with great velocity and were dashing against the rocks, they showered sprays of water. This made the cavern misty.—^०उपलक्ष्य-माणाम् which had, as though, waving chowries at its portals. There were streams running on both of its sides and they looked like moving chowries. The streams were white like a garland of snow (हिमहार) (Kane takes हार as a necklace of pearls but हिमहार which balances with हरहास appears more poetic) and also like the laughter of Śiva (which is also white. See above.) अन्तःस्थापितमणिकमण्डलुमण्डलम्—with a circular bejewelled कमण्डलु inside it. अन्तःस्थापितं मणिकमण्डलुमण्डलं यस्याम्. मणिकमण्डलुमण्डलम्. This shows that Bāṇa loses sight of his plot in the midst of his description—This कमण्डलु is none else but that of पुण्डरीक as we shall see below 'तस्मिन्ना तमेव कमण्डलुमादाय' । It is too much to imagine that Puṇḍarīka had a jewelled Kamaṇḍalu. There is no mention of a मणिकमण्डलु in the description of पुण्डरीक. Bāṇa had nowhere mentioned the possibility of Mahāśwetā's bringing a कमण्डलु from her father's place nor has the latter presented one to her. Under the circumstances it would have been better if Bāṇa had dropped the word मणि. मण्डल cannot be taken in the sense of a group or circle for, as we have seen above, the maiden was यातिगणोचितमात्रम्

and hence we cannot imagine that there were many कमण्डलुs (some of which were studded with jewels). This is certainly a defect in Bāṇa योगपट्टिका—a kind of cloth worn on the back and knees by ascetics during the abstract meditation. It was hanging in a corner (एकान्तावलम्बित). विशाखि etc. विशाखिकायाः शिखरे निबद्धं नालिकेरफलस्य वल्कलं (skin) तन्मयं धौतं उपानहोः (sandals) युगं (pair) यस्याम् विशाखिका= (शिकाळे in Marathi) a loop. Here a pair of sandals were placed on the loop. अवशीर्णं etc. the bed of bark which was placed in a corner (एकदेश) (वल्कलशयनीय) was dusty on account of holy ash (भस्म) that was scattered. महाश्वेता used to apply भस्म all over her body. As she slept, it was spread on the bed and that is why the bed was dusty. अंगभस्म—holy ash applied to body. इन्दुमण्डलेन etc.—There was a begging bowl made of conch (शंख) which was, as if, the lunar disc carved out (in the shape of a भिक्षाकपाल). As the begging bowl was made of conch it was white; hence the idea that it was carved out of the moon's disc. Some understand here इन्दुमण्डले-नेव टङ्कोत्कीर्णेन शङ्खमयेन as separate adjectives of भिक्षाकपाल. We feel that our interpretation brings out the necessary poetic touch which we hardly miss in Bāṇa. संनिहितभस्मालाबुकां—wherein was to be found a gourd-vessel for storing ashes (भस्म). अलाबुक a vessel made of the gourd fruit. This fruit is very light and floats in water. Cf. किं हि नामैतदम्बुनि मज्जन्यलावूनि प्लवन्ते ग्रावाण इति ।—महावीरचरित I. तस्याश्च द्वारि etc. The main sentence is तस्याश्च द्वारि समुपस्थितां तां कन्यकामवादीत्—वल्कलशयनशिरोभागाविन्यस्तवीणाम् qualifies तां कन्यकाम् = who had placed her lute near the pillow of the bed made of bark. वल्कलमयं शयनं तस्य शिरोभागे विन्यस्ता वीणा यया सा. पर्णपुटेन—with a vessel made of leaves. (पर्ण) [‘द्रोण’ in Marathi.] अर्घसलिलम्=holy water—i. e. water meant for offering अर्घः—for अर्घं see note supra. अलमतियन्त्रणया= enough of this constraint. Cf. अलमलमुपचारयन्त्रणया—मालविकाग्निमित्र IV. 5. For अलम्—see above. कृतम्—enough. स्वदीयमालोकनमपि etc.—Even your mere glance is capable of (अलं) removing all sins. अलं=able to [as in तस्यालमेघा क्षुभितस्य तृष्यै । रघुवंश II]. Note that अलं in the above sentence अलमतियन्त्रणया means ‘enough’ अघमर्षण=अघं (sin) मर्षति (destroys) इति ‘sin-destroying prayer’ this is the name applied to the 190th सूक्त in the 10th मण्डल of ऋग्वेद.

ऋतं च सत्यं चाभीद्धातपसोऽध्यजायत । ततो रात्रिरजायत ततः समुद्रो अर्णवः ॥
समुद्रावर्णवादि संवत्सरो अजायत । अहोरात्राणि विदधद्विश्वस्य मिषतो वशी ॥
सूर्याचन्द्रमसौ धाता यथा पूर्वमकल्पयत् । दिवं च पृथिवीं चांतरिक्षमथो सुवः ॥

For अघमर्षण see. App. IV

Note the use of passive imperative in विमुच्यतां, आस्यतां etc. which indicates respect for the person addressed. अनुबध्यमानः—when pressed (again and again). अतिथिसपर्या=worship of the guest. अतिथि=guest. This word is derived in more ways than one. (i) न विद्यते तिथिर्वारान्तरं वा यस्य सः (ii) from अत्—अतति to go—one who is always journeying (iii) न तिष्ठतीति अतिथिः. Cf. “एकरात्रं तु निवसन्नतिथिर्ब्राह्मणः स्मृतः अनित्यं हि स्थितो यस्मात् तस्मादतिथिरुच्यते ॥ मनुस्मृति III—102. (iv) अनित्य+स्थित (नन्दन) (v) अनित्य + आगम (पराशर) (vi) “न विद्यते तिथिः तिथिज्ञानं सततप्रवसनाद् यस्य”. सपर्या=worship or honouring. Cf. सपर्यासौकर्यं हरिचरणयोरस्तमयते । सप्रश्रयं प्रतिजग्राह = accepted modestly. सप्रश्रयं—प्रश्रयेण सह यस्मिन् कर्मणि यथा स्यात्तथा । अतिदूरावनतेन—He bent his head in order to show his respect for her, indicating that he was inferior to her.

P. 10 L. 23.—P. 11 L. 13.

कृतातिथ्ययाच...प्रणयः । कृतातिथ्यया—कृतं आतिथ्यं यया सा । द्वितीयशिलातलोपविष्टया—द्वितीये शिलातले उपविष्टया. क्षणमिव=He waited just for a moment—during which time he tried to recollect the whole account. आरभ्य=beginning with. आरभ्य, though a gerund from रभ् with आ, is used as an adverb governing the ablative. विदितसकलवृत्तान्ता—विदितः सकलः वृत्तान्तः यया सा qualifies कन्यका. स्वयंपतितैः फलैः—fruits that were not felled but that fell down of themselves. Her bowl was filled with such fruits. Nature also seemed to bestow on her her favours. उपयोगाय नियुक्तवती—asked (चद्रापीड) to eat them. नाम=indeed. Cf. विनीतवेष्टेण प्रवेष्ट्यानि तपोवनानि नाम । शाकुन्तल I. Act. किमतः परमाश्चर्यं what is more wonderful (than this) ? व्यपगतचेतनाः—having no consciousness. व्यपगता चेतना येषाम्. Bāna should have used the word अचेतना—as the trees were not व्यपगतचेतन (whose चैतन्य was gone) but were अचेतन (had no चैतन्य at all). समतिसृजन्तः=offering (Pres. Part. from सृज् with सम् + अति) आत्मानुग्रहं उपपादयन्ति =honour themselves (inasmuch as they i. e. the fruits are accepted by her). चित्रं=wonderful. Cf. चित्रं चित्रं बत बत महश्चित्रमेतद् विचित्रम् । and also चित्रं बधिरो नाम व्याकरणमध्येष्यते । अदृष्टपूर्वम् = न दृष्टं पूर्वं यस्य—not seen before. आलोकितं = a past passive participle from लोक् with आ—here used as a noun. अधिकतरोपजातविस्मयः—अधिकतरं उपजातः विस्मयः यस्य. अधिकतरोपजात is a सुप्सुप् compound. The whole is a बहुव्रीहि compound. निर्झरजलनिर्वर्तितस्नानविधिः—निर्झरस्य जले निर्वर्तितः स्नानविधिः येन सः. Chandrapīḍa refreshed himself by a dip in the water of a neighbouring streamlet. उपस्पृश्य—after sipping water i. e. doing the आचमनविधि. तावद् अवतस्थे यावत्—stopped so long as (etc.) तावत् यावत् are used as correlatives in very many senses (i) as much as (ii) all “यावन्मानुष्येकं शक्यमुपपादयितुं तावत्सर्वमुपपाद्यन्ताम्” का. 62 (iii) as long as—so long. This is the sense in which the correlatives are used here. Also cf.

न तावन्निर्वीर्यैः परपरिभवाक्रान्तिरूपणैः ।
वहाम्यङ्गैरेभिः प्रतनुमपि संस्काररचनाम् ॥
न यावन्निःशेषक्षपितरिपुचक्रस्य निहितं ।
सुगांगे हेमाङ्कं नृवर तव सिंहासनमिदम् ॥—मुद्राराक्षस.

इति परिसमापिताहारं.....रोदितुमारेभे । परिसमापिताहारं—परिसमापितः आहारः यथा. निर्वर्तित—निर्वर्तितः संध्योचित्ताचारः विधिः यथा—concluded her evening rites. विश्रब्धं—non-chalantly. Cf. विश्रब्धं हरिणाश्वरन्यचकिता देशगतप्रत्ययाद् । स्वप्नवासवदत्तम् I. 15. ताम् is the object of अवादीत् । After eating food and drinking water चद्रापीड asked महाश्वेता. स्वप्नसादप्रसि-प्रोत्साहितेन—स्वप्नसादस्य प्राप्तिः तथा प्रोत्साहितेन. Chandrāpīḍa was encouraged by महाश्वेता's favour and therefore the curiosity roused in him made him bold to make some enquiries of her. मानुषतासुलभो लघिमा—levity natural to mankind. It is certainly ungentlemanly to enquire about the private life of a lady one does not know. Chandrāpīḍa therefore, thought that his curiosity was the mere result of levity. अनिच्छन्तमपि—though I don't desire (to ask you). Note the construction प्रश्नकर्माणि नियोजयति—the subject of this is मानुषतासुलभो लघिमा. प्रभुप्रसादलवः—just a bit of favour from the great. अधीरप्रकृतिः—अधोरा प्रकृतिः (स्वभावः) यस्य impatient person. 'Even the slightest favour from the exalted emboldens the fickle-minded' प्रागल्भ्यं धाट्यैम्; कालकल= a short interval, a moment. Chandrāpīḍa means that there is some justification for his inquiry. Association even if it be for a very short time begets familiarity. अणुरपि—etc. Even a little acceptance of courtesy produces respect. तद्यदि etc. He says that महाश्वेता should narrate her account if it is not too painful to her. Note the modest language he uses 'आत्मानमनुग्राह्यमिच्छामि'. कतरत्—which (going with the word कुलं) कतमम् would have been better. मरुतां—of gods. कालिदास has used the word मरुत् in the sense 'gods' in वैमानिकानां मरुतामपश्यदा-कृष्टलीलाश्ररलोकपालान् ।—रघुवंश VI. 1. गुह्यक—name of a class of demigods like Yakṣas. They are attendants of Kubera and guardians of his treasures. Cf. गुह्यकस्तं ययाचे । in मेघदूत. अप्सरसः= nymphs. Cf. अप्सु निर्मथनदेव रसात्तस्माद्वरश्रियः । उत्सेतुर्मनुजश्रेष्ठ तस्मादप्सरसोऽभवन् । A class of female divinities or celestial damsels who reside in the sky and are regarded as the wives of the Gandharvas. They are very fond of bathing, can change their shapes, and are endowed with super-human powers. They are called स्वर्वेद्याः and are usually described as the servants of Indra. Mahābhārata आदिपर्व speaks of them as the daughters of Kāśyapa and Ariṣṭa. See also App. IV. कुलमनुगृहीतं—favoured the family. Note the roundabout but modest way of the questions. कुसुमसुकुमारे—tender like flower. व्रतग्रहणम्—taking the vow. क्वेदं वयः etc. Note the use of क्व.....क्व which indicates contrast or disparity. Cf. क्व सूर्यप्रभवो वंशः क्व चाल्पविषया मतिः। रघुवंश I. 2 also क्व तेऽन्योयं यत्नः क्व च नु गहनाः कौतुकरसाः। उत्तररामचरित VI. 33, and also क्व वयं क्व परोक्षमन्मथो मृगशावैः सममेधितो जनः। शाकुन्तल II. 23. अद्भुतमिव—as though it is a wonder.

किंनिमित्तं etc.—why do you have your abode which is full of happiness, and resort to this wild life?—अनेकसिद्धसाध्यसंबाधानि—full of (संबाधानि) several सिद्धs and साध्यs. सिद्ध—a semidivine being supposed to be of great purity and holiness and said to be particularly characterised by eight supernatural faculties called सिद्धिs—अणिमा, लघिमा, प्राप्ति, प्राकाम्य, महिमा, ईशित्व, वशित्व and कामावसाधिता. Cf. “उद्वेजिता वृष्टिभिराश्रयन्ते गृह्णाणि यस्यास्तपवन्ति सिद्धाः।” कुमा. I-5. साध्य—a class of celestial beings. वनमाधिवससि—resort to forest life. वस with अधि governs the accusative. कश्चायं etc. “How wonderful it is,” says चन्द्रापीड, “that Mahāśvetī has such a fair body though it is fashioned from those very elements which go to make our bodies”. नेदमस्माभिः etc. I have never seen or heard of such a thing before. अस्माभिः—Chandrāpīḍa refers to himself in the plural. Great persons always refer to themselves in plural. दुष्यन्त calling himself as वयं—in वयं तत्त्वान्वेषान्मधुकर हतास्त्वं खलु कृती। शाकुन्तल I Act. किमप्यन्तर्ध्यायन्ती—thinking very deeply or musing about something. She then stopped for a moment, took a deep breath. स्थूलस्थूलैः etc.—all these words in instrumental plural qualify the word अश्रुभिः (tears). अन्तर्गतां हृदयशुद्धि etc. They were coming out bringing with them the purity of her heart (as they were coming out from within). इन्द्रियप्रसादं—serenity of the senses. तपोरसनिष्यन्द—the stream of the ‘juice’ of penance. द्रवीकृत्य turning it into liquid. This is a च्वि form from द्रव + कृ—as in स्वागतीकृत्य केकाः अच्छाच्छैः—extremely pure. अमल-कपोलस्थलगलितैः—dripping from her broad spotless cheeks. अमलं निर्मलं यत् कपोलस्थलं तस्मात् गलितैः. अवशीर्ण etc. अवशीर्णः (broken) यः हारः तस्य मुक्ताफलानां तरलः यः पातः तद्वत् that fell down as quickly (and splendidly) as the pearls of a necklace cut asunder. अनुबद्धबिन्दुभिः—the drops of which were running in continuous stream. वल्कलावृत etc. वल्कलेन आवृतौ यौ कुचौ तयोः शिखरान्यां जर्जरिताः सीकराः येषां. The tears were falling from her eyes and the shower was striking against the ends of her breasts; and hence the tears were sprayed about. Cf. The commentator's remark एतेन कुचयोः अतिकठिन्यं व्यञ्जितम् । आमीलितलोचना— with eyes closed. रोदितुमारेभे—Mahāśwetā was overwhelmed with grief when she remembered her sorry past.

तां च प्ररुदितां.....श्रूयताम् । व्यसनोपनिपात = onslaught of calamities. अनभिभवनीयां—that does not deserve to be attacked (अभि + भू = to attack, आत्मीयां कुर्वन्ति—make their own. सर्वथा etc. Chandrāpīḍa says "It's true that calamities do befall human beings." The two negatives न...न make an assertive affirmative according to the rule द्वौ नञौ प्रकृतार्थं गमयतः । शरीरधर्मन् = human being. The word धर्मन् becomes धर्म at the end of the compound. बलवती हि द्वन्द्वानां प्रवृत्तिः—the actions of the pairs are certainly great. द्वन्द्वs are सुख-दुःख, लाभ-अलाभ, etc. to which everyone is subject. Chandrāpīḍa suggests that Mahāśwetā should feel troubled is not unnatural. But he is surprised very much to find her shedding tears, for trivial things don't make the great weep. Note the construction शोककरोण क्षेत्रीक्रियन्ते मूर्त्यः . न हि क्षुद्रनिर्घाताभिहता चलति वसुधा. Earth would never shake by the fall of mild strokes. This is stated by way of illustration. This is an instance of the figure of speech called अर्थान्तरन्यास in which a general or a particular statement is supported by a particular or a general statement respectively. An excellent illustration of this अलंकार is :— बृहत्सहायः कार्यार्थं क्षोदीयानपि गच्छति । संभूयाम्भोधिमभ्येति महानद्या नगापगा ॥ इति संवर्धितकुतूहलः etc. इति = thus. Chandrāpīḍa's curiosity was all the more increased when he saw the maiden shedding tears. शोकस्मरणहेतुना the cause of reminding her of her grief. He thought that he had committed an offence inasmuch as his inquiry resulted in her remembering her grief. मुख-प्रक्षालनोदक—मुखस्य प्रक्षालनाय उदकं. उपनिन्ये—is perfect third person singular of नी with उप. तदनुरोधात्-तस्य अनुरोधात् i. e. according to his wish. अविच्छिन्नबाष्पजलधारासन्ताना—अविच्छिन्नः बाष्पजलस्य धाराणां सन्तानः (stream) यस्यां कषायितोदरे (qualifying लोचने—two eyes). The interior (उदर) of which was slightly reddish—due to sobbing. वल्कलोपान्त— with the end of the bark garment. वदनमपमृज्य she wiped off (the tears on) the face. अतिनिर्वृणहृदयायाः who is extremely hard-hearted. Mahāśwetā curses herself once again and asks him 'what's the use of knowing my unfortunate account.' None-the-less, as he was so curious she would narrate it.

एतव्यायेण.....स्वामिनी तस्याभवत् । Here begins Mahāśweta's story.
 कल्याणाभिनिवेशिनः—कल्याणे (good) अभिनिवेशः यस्य—good loving i. e. a nobleman. Cf. आलोकयतु तावत् कल्याणाभिनिवेशी लक्ष्मीमेव प्रथमम् । कादम्बरी श्रुतिविषयमापतितं—has reached the ears. विबुधसङ्घः = the abode of gods (विबुध). For the word विबुध in the sense of 'god' compare the सुभाषित—गोसारं न निधीनां महयन्ति महेश्वरं विबुधाः । There were अप्सरसः in the abode of gods. For the word अप्सरसः see above. कमलयोनि = Brahmā—born in the lotus. Note in this paragraph Bāṇa's vast vocabulary. He has used fourteen different words to indicate the same idea of 'being born from.' अर्ककिरण = rays of the sun. सौदामिनी = lightning Cf. तडित् सौदामिनी विद्युत् चपला चंचलापि सा । शंप शतहृदा हृदिन्यैरावत्यक्ष्णप्रभा ॥ दक्षस्य प्रजापतेरतिप्रभूतानां कन्यकानां मध्ये—from among the too many daughters of दक्ष प्रजापति—Dakṣa had as many as sixty daughters in all. This reference to अतिप्रभूत कन्यकाः suffers from the fault अपुष्टार्थत्व—'redundant use,' as this has no bearing on the context. The reader can as well understand the account without knowing the fact that Dakṣa had too many daughters. An illustration of this दोष is found in विलोक्य वितते व्योम्नि विधुं मुञ्च स्वं प्रिये । in which the word वितत is superfluous. मुनि and अरिष्टा were the names of the two daughters. मुनि had sixteen sons the first among whom was चित्रसेन and the last चित्ररथ. सकलत्रिभुवनप्रख्यातपराक्रमः—सकलत्रिभुवने प्रख्यातः पराक्रमः यस्य । whose valour was known or broadcast all over the three worlds. आखण्डल-इन्द्र (the king of gods) whose lotuslike feet (चरणकमल) were fondled by the crests of the head (मौलिमाला) of all gods. समस्ताः ये सुराः तेषां मौलिमालाः ताभिः लालितं चरणं एव नलिनं यस्य—qualifies आखण्डल. सुहृच्छब्देनोपबृंहितप्रभावः (qualifying चित्ररथ) whose valour was increased on account of the fact that Indra called him his friend. अधिपत्य=leadership. असिलता etc. (qualifies बाहुना)—arm which was darkened by the collection of the rays of his sword (which he used to wield constantly). असिलता खड्गलता तस्य मरीचयः तेषां निकरः तेन मेचकितेन ज्ञयामलितेन । शैशवे एव आसवान् obtained (the leadership) while yet a boy. हृतश्च etc. तस्य goes with निवासः—He was residing on the Hemakūṭa mountain. भारतवर्षादुत्तरेण—to the north of भारतवर्ष. Note the use of the ablative (भारतवर्षात्) which is against the rule of पाणिनि which says that the words उत्तरेण, दक्षिणेन etc. govern the accusative, किंपुरुषनाम्नि वर्षे—in the country किंपुरुष. वर्ष is a division of the world. There are nine वर्षs viz. कुरु, हिरण्य, रम्यक, इलावृत, हरि, केतुमाला, भद्राश्व, किंनर (or किंपुरुष) and भारत. The last one is mentioned in

एतद्दुर्गुलभारभारतं वर्षमय मम वर्तते वशे—शिशुपालवध XIV. 5 and also in वर्षे तद् भारतं नाम भारती यत्र सन्ततिः । वर्षपर्वत—is the mountain that divides one country from another. हेमकूट is one of the seven वर्षपर्वतः the others being हिमवान्, ऋषभ, मेरु, नील, श्वेत and शृङ्गिन्. भुजयुगपरिपालितानि—protected by him with his two arms. गन्धर्वशत-सहस्राणि—गन्धर्वाणां शतानां सहस्राणि—hundreds of thousands of गन्धर्वः. चैत्ररथं—चित्ररथस्य इदं तेन is the subject of खानितम् (dug out) in the next sentence. भवानीपतिः=Lord Śiva—the husband of भवानी. मम्मट in his काव्यप्रकाश has pointed out that भवानीपति is a 'faulty' (दुष्ट) word. The word भवानी = पार्वती, wife of भव i.e. Śiva. So it is straight to say 'भव' instead of 'भवानीपति' which means husband of the wife of Śiva, suggesting that पार्वती had another husband too!—सोदर्य = brother (born of the same womb)—The compound is resolved as समाने उदरे शयितः स सोदर्यः. स is optionally substituted for समान by the सूत्र 'विभाषोदरे' VI-ii-88. The other compound will be समानोदर्यः अतिपरिमितगन्धर्वबलपरिवारस्य—अतिपरिमितानां (innumerable) गन्धर्वाणां बलं (army) परिवारः यस्य. स एव गिरिः i.e. the same mountain हेमकूट, सोममयूख = rays of the moon. किरणजलानुसारगलितेन—किरणा एव जलं तद् अनुसारेण गलितं qualifies लावण्य. रजनिकरकलाकलापलावण्येन रजनिकरस्य (moon) कलाः तेषां कलापस्य (collection) लावण्येन. त्रिभुवननयनाभिरामा त्रयाणां भुवनानां समाहारः त्रिभुवनं तस्य नयनेभ्यो अभिरामा (attractive)—i.e. an undisputed beauty. हिमकरकिरणावदातवर्णा—हिमकरस्य (moon) किरणवद् अवदातः (resplendent) वर्णः यस्या सा. This is redundant as only in the above line the author has told us that she was created from the लावण्य of रजनिकर-कलाकलाप. There is no point, therefore, in saying that her complexion was resplendent like the rays of the moon. मन्दाकिनीमिव क्षीरसागरः—This is stated by way of illustration. मन्दाकिनी=Celestial Ganges. मकरकेतन = Cupid (मकरः केतनं i.e. banner यस्य). सदृशसमागमोपजनितं—सदृशेन यो समागमः तेन उपजनितः (सुद् i.e. joy).

तयोश्च.....पदम्. Māhāśvetū at long last connects the link of the story to her own birth. See thinks that she was ill-fated and was born only to be miserable. विगतलक्षणा—having no auspicious signs. लक्षणा is a lucky auspicious mark on the body. They are said to be 32 in number. Cf. द्वात्रिंशलक्षणेपेतः compare also क्लेशावहा भर्तुरलक्षणाहम् । रघुवंश XIV. 5. It may, however, be noted that महाश्वेता was not in fact विगतलक्षणा but calls herself so because she was despondent. अनेक-सहस्रदुःखभाजनं—an abode of thousands of calamities. The words

पद, आस्पद, भाजन are always used in neuter singular irrespective of the gender or person of the subject. सुतजन्मातिरिक्तेन—which excelled the (festivities that would be indulged in at the time of) a son's birth—अभिनन्दितवान्. कृतयथोचितसमाचारः—कृतः यथोचितः (fitting) सम्यक् आचारः येन. On the birth of a child, various rites such as जातकर्म, षष्ठीजागर etc. are to be performed. दशमे अहनि नाम कृतवान्—contrast this with the modern method of 'naming' a child on the twelfth day (instead of on the tenth). At another place Bāṇa has also mentioned this naming ceremony as taking place on the 10th day. “अतिक्रान्ते च षष्ठीजागरे प्राप्ते च दशमेऽहनि.....चन्द्रापीड इति नाम चकार”। In the next sentence Bāṇa says that next day शुक्रनास—a Brāhmaṇa performed the नामकरणविधि of his son. Does this mean that there was some different practice prevalent in the days of Bāṇa? Or शुक्रनास on account of his official relation could not name his child before the king's son was christened! कलमधुरप्रलापिनि—कलं मधुरं च प्रलपति इति. The word कल = sweet indistinct sound. वीणेव गन्धर्वाणामङ्गादङ्गं संचरन्ती—moving from the lap of one Gandharva to the lap of another like a lute. Note that वीणा also is placed on the lap at the time of playing thereon. गन्धर्व refers both to the family of गन्धर्वs and musicians in general. This is a simple but excellent illustration at once convincing. कलमधुरप्रलापिनी is applicable to वीणा also—‘producing sweet and indistinct notes’. अविदित etc. अविदितः स्नेहस्य शोकस्य च आयासः यत्र तेन मनोहरम्. Her babyhood was pleasing because she did not know the hardships of love and sorrow. वसन्त इव मधुमासेन etc. is an excellent illustration of रशानोपमा (not मालोपमा as Kane takes it) or girdle comparison in which there is a series of similes, the उपमान (standard of comparison) in the first being the उपमेय (object of comparison) in the second and so on. मधुमास the month चैत्र. The main sentence is मे वपुषि नवयौवनेन पदं कृतं—I attained youth. Note that what is suggested is that an already charming object (viz. महाश्वेता) was rendered more charming just as वसन्त which is itself charming is rendered more attractive by मधुमास which in turn is rendered more charming by नवपल्लव and so on. पदं कृतं=set its foot. Cf. अपाङ्गयोः केवलमस्य दीर्घयोः शनैः शनैः श्यामिकया कृतं पदम् । कुमारसंभव V. 21.

अथ विजृम्भमाण.....व्यचरम् । The main sentence is अथ मधुमासदिवसेषु एकदा अहं अम्बया सह अच्छोदं सरः स्नातुमभ्यागमम्. All words in locative plural qualify the word मधुमासदिवसेषु. विजृम्भ etc. in which forests of fresh lotuses were blooming (विजृम्भमाण) विजृम्भमाणानि (expanding)

नवनलिनवनानि येषु । अकठोर etc.—which excited the lovers on account of several tender (अकठोर) mango-blossoms. Mango-blossom excites lovers. It is one of the five 'arrows' of 'Cupid' the other four being अरविन्द, अशोक, नवमल्लिका and नीलोत्पल. अकठोराः (unripened) याः चूतकलिकाः तासां कलापः तेन कृता कामुकानां (gallants) उत्कलिका येषु । उत्कलिका = उत्कण्ठा. कोमल etc.—कोमलः यः मलयस्य मारुतः (wind coming from the Malaya mountain) तस्य अवतारेण (advent) तरङ्गितानि (agitating) अनङ्गध्वजानां (banners of cupid) अंशुकानि येषु. During the days of spring, it was fashionable, in olden days, to raise the banners of cupid (अनङ्गध्वज). These banners were made to flutter by the advent of the gentle Malaya-breezes. मलयानिल is also an excitant of passion. मदकलित etc. मदेन (intoxication) कलिताः याः कामिन्यः तासां गण्डूषसीधोः सेकेन (sprinkling) पुलकिताः बकुलाः येषु—i.e. in which Bakula trees blossomed by the mouthfuls of wine from damsels. It is a poetic convention that Bakula tree blossoms when कामिनीs sprinkle it with mouthfuls of wine. Some other trees also blossom with the occurrence of certain things. Cf. स्त्रीणां स्पर्शात् प्रियङ्गुर्विकसति बकुलः सीधुगण्डूषसेकात् । पादाघातादशोकः तिलककुरबकौ वीक्षणालिंगनाभ्याम् । मन्दारो नर्मवाक्यात् पटुमृदुहस-नाच्चम्पको बक्त्रवाताच्युतो । गीतान्नमेहर्विकसति च पुरो नर्तनात् कर्णिकारः ॥ गण्डूष-monthful. Cf. गण्डूषजलमात्रेण शर्फरी फर्फरायते.—सीधु = spirit distilled from molasses, rum. Cf. मनोज्ञगन्धं सहकार गङ्ग पुराण सीधुं नवपाटलं च । रघुवंश XVI. 52. मधुकर etc. in which the buds of Kāṭeya blossoms were rendered black on account of strain (कलङ्क) in the form of a swarm of bees (मधुकरकुल). मधुकरकुलं एव कलङ्कः तेन कालीकृतानि श्यामीकृतानि कालेयकानां कुङ्कुमलानि येषु. Note the alliteration. अशोकतरु etc. resounding with (मुखर) thousands of jinglings (झंकार) of the damsel's jewelled anklets as they were made to rattle when they (i. e. women) were striking (i. e. kicking) the Aśoka trees. अशोकतरोः ताडनेन रणितानि रमणीनां मणिनूपुराणि तेषां झङ्कारः तेषां सहस्रेण मुखराः (ये दिवसाः) तेषु । विकसन् etc.—in which the mango trees (सहकार) appeared pleasing (lit. were lucky—सुभग) on account of the sweet humming of a swarm of bees that had collected on the fragrant blooming buds.—विकसतां मुकुलानां परिमले पुञ्जितं यद् अलीनां जालं तस्य मञ्जुना सिञ्चितेन (sweet humming). सुभगाः सहकाराः यत्र. अविरल etc. in which the surface of the earth was whitened by the sandy bank (वालुकापुलिन) in the form of a thick (अविरल) pollen of flowers. (कुसुमधूली) अविरलानि यानि कुसुमानि तेषां धूलिः परागः स एव वालुका—पुलिनं तेन धवलितं धरातलं येषु. The pollen as well as the sand-bank are white. मधुमद etc. in which swings of creepers were shaken by swarms of bees that appeared queer (विडम्बित) as they were intoxicated with honey. The word (विडम्बन) means parody. The bees under the influence of an intoxicant were not the bees but were as it were a parody of bees. मधुमदेन विडम्बिताः विह्वलीकृताः ये मधुकराः तेषां कदम्बकेन संवाह्यमानाः लताः एव दोलाः येषु । उत्फुल्ल etc.—in which very cloudy days (उदामदुर्दिन) were (as if) produced by the showers of honey (मधुसीकर) (which was in the flowers that were) tossed up (उल्लासित) by intoxicated cuckoos (मत्तकोकिल) that were resting on the Lavali creepers just budding into leaves. The cuckoos resting on the Lavali creeper made the honey in the flowers toss up resulting in a shower of honey on the surface of the earth. उत्फुल्लः पल्लवाः यासां एवं-विधाः लवल्यः तासु लीयमानाः ये मत्तकोकिलाः तैः उल्लासितं यत् मधु तस्य सीकराः तैः उदामदुर्दिनं येषु । प्रोषितजन etc. in which the path was wet with blood (रुधिराद्र-मार्ग) coming from the travellers' (पथिक) hearts that were broken (स्फुटित) due to fear at the sound of the twanging of the bow which was drawn (आस्फालित) by cupid who was delighted with the offerings of the oblations in the form of the lives of women whose husbands were on journey. The idea is that during spring people get excited by 'Love', who is ever ready to strike at the hearts of poor lovers. When persons on journey realised that Love's shafts are ever ready to victimise their sweet-hearts, (as they were away) their (i. e. travellers') hearts were broken and the blood coming therefrom rendered the roads wet. This is a very curious way of describing the noble season—spring. This compound indicates Bāṇa's patent defect—viz. that he has no sense of proportion. Such huge compounds hardly please the aesthetic sense of any reader. The best method to understand such compounds is to start from the end e. g. मार्ग that was आर्द्र on account of रुधिर that came from the हृदय of पथिक and so on. प्रोषिताः ये जनाः तेषां जायाः तासां जीवाः तेषां उपहाराः तैः हृष्टः मन्मथः तेन आस्फालितं यत् चापं तस्य यः रवः तस्मात् यत् भयं तेन स्फुटितानि (विभिन्नानि) यानि पथिकहृदयानि तेषां रुधिरात् आर्द्रकृतः मार्गः येषु । अविरत etc. in which the quarters (दिक्खल) were deafened (बधिरिकृत) by the hissing sound (produced by feathers) of the cupid's shafts that were constantly falling (अविरतपतत्). अविरतं पतन्तः कुसुमशरस्य मदनस्य पतत्रिणः (बाणाः) तेषां पत्रसूक्ष्मेण बधिरिकृतानि दिक्खलानि यत्र. दिवापि etc. full of a collection, (सार्थ) of Abhisārikas that were blinded by the passion of Love rising within, even during the day, (दिवा). अभिसारिका is a woman who goes out to meet her lover after making an appointment. She is often described as wearing a white saree and going out on full moon nights thus concealing her indentity. Cf. कान्तार्थिनी तु या याति सा भवेदभिसारिका. मदेन मदेन युक्ता हिंसा लज्जां या कान्तमभिसरति अभिसारयति वा. also cf. निशासु भास्वत्कलनूपुराणां यः संचरोऽभूदभिसारिकाणाम् । रघुवंश XVI. 12. The commentator explains अविरत etc. rather differently. अविरतं पतन्तः कुसुमशरेषु पुष्पकाण्डेषु ये पतत्रयः पक्षिणः तेषां पत्रसूकरैः बधिरिकृताति दिङ्मुखानि येषु. It should be noted that he interprets कुसुमशर as flowers, and पतत्रिन् as a bird. The birds were incessantly perching on the flowers and the quarters were deafened by the flapping of their wings. उद्वेल etc. flooded by the overflowing ocean of Love “उद्वेलः प्रवर्धितजलः यो रतिरसः अगाधत्वसाम्यात् स एव सागरः तस्य पूरः तेन प्लावितेषु । सकल etc. that gladdened the hearts of all men. All these clauses are to be connected with मधुमासदिवसेषु—during the days of spring. प्रोत्फुल्ल etc. प्रोत्फुल्लानि (full blown) नवनलिनानि कुमुदानि कुवलयानि कल्हाराणि यत्र qualifying अच्छोद—lake. कल्हार—a white water lily. सभृङ्गिरिदीनि—along with भृङ्गिरिदि qualifying त्र्यम्बक—प्रतिबिम्बकानि. पांशुनिमग्न etc. पांशौ (dust) निमग्नानि कृषाणां पदानां मण्डलानि—(अतः) अनुमितानि (inferred) मुनिजनानां प्रणामप्रदक्षिणानि यत्र. In the dust around the images of Siva were foot-prints of the sages that went round them—प्रदक्षिण is circumambulation from left to right so that the right side is always turned towards the object circumambulated i. e. a reverential salutation made by the walking in this manner. प्रदक्षिणप्रक्रमणाकृद्धानोद्दर्विषस्तन्मिथुनं चकासे । कुमारसंभव VII. 79. The object of वन्दमाना is प्रतिबिम्बकानि. The author states the objects which were appreciated by महाश्वेता. The footprints of the sages are कृश because the ascetics emaciate their bodies by the observance of religious practices. अमरभर etc.—the creeper-bower was attractive on account of a collection (उपहार) of flowers, the pollen of which was shattered and the interior (गर्भ) of which was bent due to the weight of the bees अमरभरेण भुग्नः गर्भः यस्य ; जर्जरितानि कुसुमोपहाराणि च यस्मिन् । परभृत. etc. परभृतानां (cuckoos) नखानां कोटिभिः (ends) पाटितानि कुङ्कुमलानि नालानि तेषां विवरेभ्यः (holes) विगलितं यत् मधु (honey) तस्य निक्राः धाराः यत्र—एवंविधः सहकारतरुः. This is a long but easy compound—परभृत or परभृत is the Indian Cuckoo. It is so called because it is believed to lay its eggs in the nests of crows who nourish their young ones. They are thus fed by others (पर). Cf. क्रीणामशिक्षितपटुत्वममानुषीषु संदृश्यते किमुत याः प्रतिबोधवत्यः । प्रागन्तरिक्षगमनात् स्वमपत्यजातमन्यैर्द्विजैः परभृताः खलु पोषयन्ति ॥ शाकुन्तल V. 22. उन्मद etc. उन्मदं यद् मयूरकुलं तस्य कलकलैः (noise) भीताः ये भुजङ्गाः तैः मुक्तं तलं यस्याः एवंविधा चन्दनवीथिका. Snakes are afraid of peacocks and their sound makes them leave their usual abode viz. the sandal tree. विकचकुसुम etc. विकचानां (full-blown) कुसुमानां पुञ्जस्य पातेन सूचिताः (suggested), वनदेवतानां प्रेङ्खोलनेन शोभना—एवंविधा लतादोला. While the wood-nymphs were enjoying and playing on the swings formed by creepers, full-blown flowers fell down. Their collection suggested that the deities were playing there. बहल etc.—बहले कुसुमानां रजःपटले मग्ना कलहंसानां पदलेखा (foot-prints) यत्र. स्निग्धमनोहरतरङ्गशदर्शनलोभाक्षिसहृदया—स्निग्धः मनोहरतरश्च उद्देशः तस्य दर्शनस्य लोभेन आक्षिप्तं हृदयं यस्याः ।

The first sentence is एकस्मिंश्च प्रदेशे कुसुमगन्धमभ्यजिघ्रम् । वनानिल = wind in the forest. अभिभूतान्यकुसुमपरिमलः—that outclassed the fragrance of other flowers. It was so strong that even though the forest was full of full-blown flowers, this particular scent was most dominant. अभिभूतः अन्यकुसुमानां परिमलः येन । अति—अतिसुरभितया is the cause of अनुलिम्पन्तमिव. etc. On account of its extreme sweetness the fragrance delighted or filled the organ of smell. अहमहमिकया—as though in a race. अनाघ्रातपूर्वम् पूर्वं न आघ्रातः—not smelt before. अमानुषलोकोचितम्—अमानुषलोकस्य (heaven) उचितं. This naturally roused महाश्वेता's curiosity and she started looking up for its source. मुकुलितलोचना—-with eyes closed—when one smells an excellent scent, one closes his eyes in order to enjoy the fragrance fully, thus shutting out the working of all other sense-organs. The main sentence now is अहं.....मुनिकुमारकमपश्यम्. कौतुकतरला—agile through curiosity. अभ्यधिक etc. in which a collection of swans (कलहंस) was attracted by the increasing sound of my jewelled anklet. कौतुकेन तरला (या गतिः) तया अधिकतरोपजातः मणिनूपुराणां झङ्कारः तेन आकृष्टाः सरः कलहंसाः याभ्याम् । हरहुताशन—(qualifying वसन्त) who was sorry on account of grief for Madana who was a fuel to the fire of Śiva. Śiva burnt Madana to ashes when he went to interrupt him in his penance. Cf. क्रोधं प्रभो संहर संहरेति यावद्विरः खे मरुतां चरन्ति । तावत् स वहिर्भवनेत्रजन्मा भस्मावशेषं मदनं चकार । कुमारसंभव III. 72. Vasanta was Madana's friend. इरेण हुताशने इन्धनीकृतः यः मदनः तस्य शोकः तेन विधुरः (distressed) अखिलमण्डल etc.—He was, as though, the crescent moon on Śiva's head observing a vow for the acquisition of the full moon [Śiva is often represented as wearing a crescent of the moon in his head] not a part of it only. अखिलं यन्मण्डलं षोडशकलात्मकं तस्य प्राप्त्यर्थं धृतं व्रतं येन । अयुग्मलोचन etc.—He was, as if, Kāma (cupid) who had taken to religious observance in order to please Śiva (अयुग्मलोचनं i.e. having not 'two eyes'). Madana was deputed by the gods to distract Śiva from his penance. The मुनिकुमारक was also propitiating Lord Śiva. अतितेजस्वितया etc.—On account of his great lustre he appeared to be (i) at the centre of a cage of flashing lightning (प्रचलिततडित्) (ii) entering the interior (उदर) of the disc of the summer sun (iii) standing in a mass of a collection of flames of fire. With this compare the passage “अतिधवलप्रभापरिगतदेहतया.....” above उन्मिषन्त्या etc.—He was making the region around golden by his lustre which was like the light of a small lamp (दीपिका). Kerosene lamp emits tawny light and not white. कपिलीकृतं काननं येन । Also cf. “देहप्रभावितनेन.....दन्तमयमिव तं प्रदेशं कुर्वतीम् ।” above. रोचनारस etc.—whose tender tawny tufts of hair were like an amulet (प्रतिसर) rolled in Rochanā. Rochanā or Gorochana is a bright yellow pigment prepared from the mine or hide of a cow. रोचनारसे लुलितः यः प्रतिसरः तस्मान्नाः सुकुमाराः पिङ्गलाः जटाः यस्यः । पुण्यपताकाय etc. He appeared like the stream of Gangā decorated with a line of sandy bank. (बालपुलिनलेखया) This was so because he was wearing on his forehead a line of holy ash (which looked like a sandy bank) which was a banner of merit (पुण्यपताका) and which was like the line of sandal paste (चन्दनलेखा) that was drawn to pacify the passion (उत्कण्ठा) for union with Saraswatī. Saraswatī is the Goddess of learning. The मुनिकुमारक was anxious to master all learning and therefore had a passion for Saraswatī. In order to cool that passion it appeared that he was wearing sandal paste on his forehead. What in fact he applied was holy ash (भस्म) which was as it were a banner of merit. This is one idea. Another idea is that the line of holy ash made him appear like the holy Ganges with its line of sandy bank. Note that the भस्मललाटिका is first compared to चन्दनरेखा and then to बालपुलिनरेखा because all of them are white. Instead of referring to the उत्कण्ठा for सरस्वतीसमागम it would have been better if the poet had worded the same idea in some other way keeping in mind the character of the object described. पुण्यपताकायमाना—the word is formed by applying क्यङ् affix to the word पुण्यपताका in the sense of 'behaving like' by the Sutra 'कर्तुः क्यङ् सलोपश्च' III-i-11. अनेकशाप etc. His two creeper-like eyebrows were, as if, the arch gate of the house of 'eye-brows knitting' in giving many curses. He was capable of giving curses as he had acquired lot of merit. That gives power to a person to say ill to a person with the result that ill does befall that person. This indicates that the मुनिकुमारक had acquired much merit. The eyebrows were curved. The तोरण is also curved: hence the fancy. अत्यायततया—on account of this extreme length, the eyes were, as if, a garland strung together. Possession of elongated eyes is a sign of personal grandeur. सर्वहरिणै etc.—the deer have beautiful eyes. Beautiful girls are called हरिणाक्षी. His eyes were so attractive that it appeared that every one of all the deer in the world had given his pair of beautiful eyes to him. सर्वहरिणैः दत्तः लोचनशोभायाः संविभागः यस्मै cf. 'सर्वहंसैरिव धवलतया कृतसंविभागाम्' above. आयत etc.—His nose was long and high. अप्राप्त etc.—the idea is: his lower lip was red and it appeared that the राग (viz. passion and redness of budding youth) which did not get any entrance in his heart was residing only at the entrance viz. lower lip. The pun rests in the word राग which when taken with the lip means redness, and with heart means passion. It is suggested that he was not passionate. रुचक an ornament of gold. पादलीकृतः अधरः एव रुचकः यस्य. अनुद्भिन्न etc.—His beardless face was like a fresh lotus which had not yet obtained the grace (विलास) of being surrounded by a hive of bees. The beard is dark like a hive of bees—अनासादितः मधुकरावल्या वलयाकारेण यः परिक्षेपः तल्लक्षणः यः. विलासः येन—qualifies आननम्. As the मुनिकुमारक was अनुद्भिन्नस्मश्रु, it is clear that he was yet in his teens. अनङ्ग etc.—He was wearing a sacred thread which was (i) like the string of the bow of cupid (अनङ्ग) turned into a circle and (ii) like a fibre from the lotus in the lake of austerities. In the first simile it is suggested that he was very charming and cupid discharged his arrows 'from him'. Cupid is said to reside 'in the body' of an attractive person and discharges his arrows therefrom striking a person in love. Cupid was residing 'in the body' of the मुनिकुमारक and the sacred thread was nothing else but the string of his bow. In the second simile it is suggested that he had undergone very much penance and his sacred thread was a fibre of a lotus in the lake (suggesting vastness) of his penance. The string, the fibre and the sacred thread were white. एकेन etc.—He was holding in one of his hands a kamaṇḍalu (pot) which had the shape of a Bakula fruit along with its stem; in the other he was holding a rosary of beads which appeared to have been made up of a collection of the tears of Rati who was sobbing on account of grief due to Madana's death. The tears and the अक्षमाला are white, अनेकविधा etc.—He had a navel which was like a ring (मुद्रा). It appeared like the eddy (आवर्त) at the confluence

(सङ्गम) of several rivers in the form of several sciences. The lines in the navel looked like rivers, which were the several sciences. विद्याs are four in number आन्वीक्षिकी, त्रयी वार्ता, दण्डनीति, शाश्वती. To these Manu adds a fifth viz. आत्मविद्या. But the usual number of विद्याs is said to be fourteen i.e. the four vedas (ऋग्वेद, यजुर्वेद, सामवेद and अथर्ववेद), the six Angās (viz. शिक्षा, कल्प, व्याकरण, निरुक्त, छन्दस, and ज्योतिः शास्त्र), Dharma, Mīmāṃsā, Tarka or Nyāya and the Purāṇas अन्तर्ज्ञान etc. He had on his belly a line of hair (रोमराजि) which was black in colour. Ignorance also is supposed to be dark in colour. So the poet imagines that the dark line of hair which was as dark as a streak of pigment, was, as if, the path of exit (अपयानपदवी) of all ignorance which is the result of infatuation (मोह). Ignorance as stated above is dark; the path along which it went out from him was also dark: This was, therefore, represented by the रोमराजि on the belly, which is also dark. आत्मतेजसा etc.—His buttocks (जघनभाग) were surrounded by a girdle of Muñja (a kind of grass) string. This string was, as if, the circular halo that remained round his buttocks when he conquered the sun by his inner lustre. It is suggested that the lustre of his soul was so great that he could excel even the Sun. A girdle of Muñja grass is worn round the waist by ब्रह्मचारिन्s. The मौञ्जमेखला-गुण is represented as the परिवेषमण्डल. परिक्षिप्तः जघनभागः यस्य. अभ्रगङ्गा etc. He was wearing a garment of Mandāra bark that was washed in the stream of celestial Ganges (अभ्रगङ्गा) and which had the reddish lustre of the tip of the eyes of an old चकोर. Chakora is the name of a bird—the Greek partridge. मन्दारः is one the five देवतरुs for which see ante. अलंकारमिव ब्रह्मचर्यस्य—He was, as though, an ornament to celibacy (ब्रह्मचर्य). Herewith begin Bāṇa's brilliant rhythmic expressions. They are so well balanced and sound, so pleasing to the ears that one feels Bāṇa had used this very style throughout his works. यौवनमिव धर्मस्य. He was the youth of piety. During youth one is full of vigour and strength. The मुनिकुमारक was the youth of piety i. e. its stronghold. विलास—sport. स्वयंवरपति—self-selected husband. संकेतस्थान—the appointment place. निदाघकालमिव साषाढम्—सहाषादेन पलाशदण्डेन वर्तमानम् (कुमारकम्) आषाढः शुचिमासः (निदाघकाल) “पलाशो दण्ड आषाढः” अमरः He had a staff (आषाढ) and was like the summer which also has the आषाढ month. The word आषाढ also means the month of आषाढ which comes during निदाघकाल i. e. ग्रीष्मर्तु. The word is therefore to be understood as ‘a staff’ and ‘month of आषाढ’. It may be noted that the ब्रह्मचारिन् holds an आषाढ (staff) in his hand अथाजिनाषाढधरः

(हिमसमये) स्फुटिता या प्रियङ्गुमञ्जरी तद्वत् गौरम् (कुमारकम्)प्रियङ्गुमञ्जरीभिः गौरम् (काननम्) मधुमास etc.—whose face was decorated with the holy ash applied (on the forehead) and which was white as flower, like the Chaitrā month (मधुमास) the beginning (मुख) of which is decorated with abundance of Tilaka trees white with flowers. The pun rests on the word तिलक which is to be understood as (i) mark on the forehead
(ii) Tilaka tree. कुसुमवत् धवला या तिलकार्थं भूतिः तथा विभूषितं मुखं यस्य
(कुमारकम्) कुसुमैः धवला ये तिलकवृक्षाः तेषां विभूत्या (समृद्ध्या) विभूषितं मुखं

P. 17. L. 13—P. 18. L. 8.

तेन च.....परवशामकरोत् । कर्णवतंसीकृतां—placed on the ear (अवतं- सीकृ=to place on ear). The words in accusative singular qualify कुसुममञ्जरी. वसन्त etc. It was, as though, the splendour of the smile of forest-deity who was delighted at the arrival of Vasanta. Smiles are said to be white. मलय etc. It was like a handful of fried grains (लाजा) strewn about to greet the arrival of the breeze from the Malaya mountain. लाजा—parched or fried grain which are offered in honour of a person. “अवाकिरन् बाललताः प्रसूनैराचारलजैरिव पौरकन्याः”
R. II—10. यौवनलीला—youthful sport. सुरत etc. a line of the network of drops of water of perspiration coming on account of fatigue due to dalliance. सुरतस्य परिश्रमः तस्माद् यत् स्वेदजलं तस्य कणाः तेषां जालकं तस्य पङ्क्तिः—The आवली and the मञ्जरी are white. This is certainly an ugly expression put into the mouth of Mahāśwetā who was undergoing strict penance. ध्वजचिन्ह etc.—It was like a tail (पिच्छिका) of chowries used as a banner on the elephant in the form of cupid. Here मदन is identified with elephants and the ध्वजचिन्ह of मदन with the chowries on the elephants' head. We can also solve the compound as मनोभवस्य गजः. This is better. An elephant with the chowrie serving as the banner marches ahead of a victorious army.
Cupid was all victorious and hence a reference to his गज. मधुकरं etc.—who was an अभिसारिका to the lovers in the form of bees. Bees were hovering round the मञ्जरी and it appeared that they were the lovers yearning for the company of अभिसारिकाs. कृत्तिकातारा etc.—
that imitated the bunch of stars that go to form the Kṛttikā constellation—(called Pleiads in Greek). The constellation is the third of the 27 constellations, the first two being अश्विनी and भरणी.
It consists of six semi-bright stars collected together. परिभूतान्यकुसुमामोदः etc.—This is a repetition of the expression used in the last paragraph. तपोधनयुवा—तपः एव धनं यस्य एवंविधः युवा refers to मुनिकुमारक। रूपातिशय etc.—रूपातिशयस्य (extremely beautiful form) निष्पादनाय यानि उपकरणानि (implements) तेषां कोषस्य (treasure) अक्षीणता (unending nature). Here Bāṇa brings in his usual exaggeration. He says that the creator once created Madana whose beauty was an object of wonder to all the three worlds. After having created him, He has now created another cupid whose beautiful form excels even that of Madana. Bāṇa further goes on to say that in creating such beautiful objects like the disc of the moon or the lotuses in the yard of Goddess Laksmi, the creator was doing only an apprenticeship, his final aim being this beautiful face. It is thus suggested that the मुनिकुमारक was more attractive than (i) Madana (ii) moon (iii) lotuses. आननाकरणकौशलभ्यास—आननस्य आकरणे कौशलार्थमभ्यासः। सद्भावस्तुविरचना—creating similar objects. आलोकं—etc.—It is indeed incorrect to say that the digits of the moon in the latter half of every month are eaten up by the Sun with his सुषुम्ना ray. That the Sun does eat up the digits is evident from authority of books on religion. Bāṇa merely challenges it in a poetic sense. For in the next sentence he says that those digits are eaten up by the मुनिकुमारक. It is not quite clear whether the correct word is सुषुम्न or सुषुम्न. Grammatically it ought to be सुषुम्न as न् when preceded in a single word by क्, र् or ष् becomes ण् provided the intervening letters are not other than the vowels, the कवर्ग, पवर्ग, य, र and व. The विष्णुपुराण, however, reads सुषुम्न. in सूर्यरश्मिः सुषुम्नो यस्तर्पितेन चन्द्रमाः। In हर्षचरित Bāṇa appears to prefer सुषुम्नः. In the निरुक्त of Yaska the word सुषुम्नः is accepted—अथाप्यस्यैको रश्मिश्चन्द्रमसं प्रति दीप्यते तदेतेनोपेक्षितव्यमादित्यतोऽस्य दीप्तिर्भवति। इति। 'सुषुम्नः सूर्यरश्मिचन्द्रमा गन्धर्वः' इत्यापि निगमो भवति। II. ii. 2. ताः अस्य गभस्तयः is a slip. In the earlier sentence Bāṇa says that it is false that the sun eats up the digits of the moon and now he says ताः अस्य गभस्तयः i.e. rays. ता अस्य कलाः would have been better. गभस्ति does not mean a कला। रूपापहरिणि—that destroys beautiful form. Penance always tells upon one's health and destroys the beauty. अविचारितगुणदोषविशेषः—Who does not make any distinction between merits and defects. अविचारितः गुणदोषयोः विशेषः येन. रूपैकपक्षपाती—who is only partial towards beauty—caring not for other things. कुसुमसमय—Madana enslaved Mahāśwetā as does the intoxication of the flowering season the bee. The commentator reads. उच्छ्वसितैः सह with परवशामकरोत्. This is bad. उच्छ्वसितैः सह ought to be read with the following sentence.

उच्छ्वसितैः.....मविशद्वागः। विस्मृतनिमेषेण—who forgot the winking along with the breaths etc.—She stopped breathing and started at him. आमुकुलितपक्ष्मणा—आ—ईषत् i. e.—slightly. जिह्मित etc. जिह्मितः (crooked) तरलः च तारः (pupil of the eye) यस्मिन्—अत एव सारं (variegated) उदरं यस्य, तेन. The pupil was all the more tremulous and was directed to the corner continuously and hence, the inside of the (right) eye was spotted or variegated. त्वदायत्ता—I am yours; मनोभवाभिभूता—attacked by Love. अर्थिता—begging—the act of. अतिहेपण—extremely shameful. अकुलकुमारीजनोचितं—अकुलोचितं अकुमारीजनोचितं च. कुलकुमारी-जनानुचितम् would have been better. अप्रभवन्ती करणानाम्—unable to control the senses. भू with प्र in the sense of ‘to be master of’ governs the genitive as in प्रभवति निजस्य कन्यकाजनस्य महाराजः। मालती-माधव I Act. निष्पन्दसकलावयवा—with all my limbs motionless. This is to be connected with तत्कालाविर्भूतेनावष्टम्भेन—अवष्टम्भ stupefaction, paralysis. She was paralysed that very moment and hence her limbs became motionless. Mahāsweta suddenly fell in love with the मुनिकुमारक and knowing not what all that was, she went on staring at him. अकथित.....न. विभाव्यते—This is a characteristic description of the emotion of love. It cannot be described but is to be experienced (स्वसंवेद्य). A person is reduced to some indescribable condition when he falls in love. Cf. “कामेनोजयिनीं गते मयि तदा कामाप्यस्यां गते” IV. 1. नीयमानेव तस्मिन्मिन्द्रियैः—as though borne towards him by my senses. आकृष्यमाणा हृदयेन—dragged by my heart पृष्ठतः प्रेर्यमाणेन पुष्पधन्वना—being pushed from behind by cupid. This is an excellent idea. आत्मानम्. आत्मन् is always used in the masculine and the words qualifying it are also in the masculine though they refer to a feminine or neuter object; hence मुक्तप्रयत्नम् and not मुक्तप्रयत्नाम्. Now follows a poetic description of the changes brought on over Mahāsweta by the emotion of love. अन्तर्मेदनावकाशमिव दातुं—as though with a view to make room for मदन who was within. The idea is through the effect of passion महाश्वेता was breathing heavily. It appeared that sighs were making room for cupid and were going out. साभिलाषं etc.—the nipples of my breasts were throbbing significantly as it were to tell him that my heart was full of love. The lips of a person throb when he is about to speak. स्वेद etc.—she had no sense of shame—as she was desperately in love. It appeared that shame was washed away by the line of the drops of perspiration. Perspiration was coming out on account of her emotion. मकरध्वज etc. Her body was trembling as a result of passion. It appeared that it was afraid of the shower of the sharp arrows of cupid. तद्रूपतिशयं etc.—There was horripilation over the whole body, which was, as though, going out through curiosity to see his wonderful beauty. The student will do well to understand the significance of this state of महाश्वेता. She was hopelessly in love with the मुनिकुमारक. Naturally she was under the influence of शृंगार. In rhetorics we have several भावs or emotions which take the form of the principal Rasa or sentiment. Thus महाश्वेता was experiencing रतिभाव. These भावs are either स्थायिन् permanent or व्यभिचारिन् (Accessory). The स्थायिभावs are eight in number and accessory भावs are thirty-three in number. In this case the accessory भावs स्वेद perspiration वेपथु (trembling) and रोमाञ्च (horripilation) are directly maintained and अवष्टम्भ is suggested. अशेषतः etc.—राग (i.e. passion) entered my heart as it was completely washed from my feet by perspiration. राग = passion and redness. She had applied red अलक्तक dye to her feet. It was washed out and so 'राग' was washed out. राग (i.e. passion) therefore entered the heart.

आसीच्च.....प्रणाममकरवम् । दूरीकृतसुरतव्यतिकरे—qualifying अस्मिन् जने i.e. मुनिकुमारक—who has given up all contacts (व्यतिकर) with cohabitation (सुरत). He was observing penance and so to him dalliance was anathema. Cupid was, therefore, doing a disgraceful thing in making her fall in love with such a person. एवं च etc. It is true indeed that the hearts of women are foolish inasmuch as they are incapable of understanding the propriety of the object of love. अलम् = to be capable of—governs the dative. Mahāśwetā should have seen whether the object of her love was योग्य or अयोग्य. Note the wonderful study of the woman's mind. अतिभास्वर—extremely lustrous. For the use of 'क....क.'—see above. मन्मथ—impulses of love. प्राकृतजन—indulged in by the vulgar people. नियतं = indeed. मकरलाम्छनेन विडम्ब्यमाना, made a butt of ridicule by Cupid. चित्रं चेदं etc. This is an appropriate description of a person in love. One cannot control the senses though one knows that one ought to. The author now tells us the plight of several women who were either successful or unsuccessful in their love affairs. आकारमात्रालोकनाकुलीभूतं—agitated by the mere (मात्र) sight of his physical form. Mahāśwetā is unable to understand how she fell in love in just one moment and that too at the mere sight of his external body. Mahāśwetā says that her state was unique because her heart was in a moment crushed by love. कालो हि—Cupid is made formidable by time and qualities. In the present case there was no time that could make her fall in love. Nor did she know any of his qualities. She therefore thinks that as long as she is conscious, and before her wretched love is known to him, she should run away. कदाचित् etc. Lest he would curse her if he were enraged (कुपित) at the exhibition of passion that would not be liked by him. अदूरकोपा = न दूरः कोपः यस्मात् i.e. extremely wrathful. अपसर्पणाभिलाषिणी—अपसर्पणं (going away) अभिलषतीति. She realised that he belonged to the clan of sages and should therefore be saluted. तद्वदनाकृष्टदृष्टिप्रसरम् तद्वदनाद् आकृष्टः दृष्टेः प्रसरः यत्र—in which the range was not distracted from him. अवलित् पक्षमाला यस्मिन्. न दृष्टं भूतलं यस्मिन् etc.—उल्लसितं यत् कर्णपल्लवम् तेन (ईषत्) उन्मुक्तं कपोलमण्डलं यत्र. ईषत् is to be connected with उन्मुक्त. There is no sense in saying 'slightly respondent' आलोलालक etc.—आलोल (shaking) या अलकलता (creeper-like hair). तस्याः लसन् कुसुमावतंसः यत्र. The flowering ear-ornament was flashing on the disorderly soft mass of hair अंसदेश = shoulders. It is better to take all these as adverbial expressions.

अथ कृतप्रणामायां.....कथ्यते ।

कृतप्रणामायां मयि—when I saluted. This is an instance of what is known as सतिसप्तमि or Locative Absolute in which a noun in the locative and a present participle in the locative are placed together the meaning being 'while.....' e. g. दशरथे राजनि महीं शासति जनाः सुखभाजोऽभवन् !.....while king Daśharatha was ruling etc. दुर्लभ्य-शासनता—whose commands (शासन) cannot be transgressed. Mahāśwetā was trying to defy cupid as she was planning to run away. मदजननता that causes intoxication, अविनयबहुलता—lot of immodesty चञ्चलप्रकृतितया—fickle nature. तथा भवितव्यतया—because all things are already destined to happen. भवितव्यता = Destiny, fate—Cf. सर्वकथा भगवती भवितव्यतैव । मालतीमाधव I. 23. Mahāśwetā now says that the मुनिकुमारक was also later attacked by cupid. मत्त्रिकारदर्शनापहृतधैर्यं—मत्त्रिकारस्य दर्शनाद् अपहृतं धैर्यं यस्य. प्रदीपमिव पवनः तरलतां—just as wind agitates a lamp. His state is now described ; cf. with this the description of Mahāśwetā's state. रोमोद्गम—Mahāśwetā also had रोमाञ्च-जालकम्, श्वास or heaving, वेपथु—Mahāśwetā also had गात्रयष्टेः आकम्पनम्—स्वेदसलिलसीकरजालिका—स्वेदसलिलस्य सीकरस्य जालिका. It appeared like another blossom when it came into contact with his cheeks. कपोल-तलासंगिनी. It may be noted that he had placed a fragrant मञ्जरी on his ears. महर्शन etc.—His two eyes had the pupils raised up and had expanded due to his longing to gaze at me. The shooting line of rays (अंशुसंतान) issuing from his eyes produced an impression of lotuses and made the region around पुण्डरीकमय (full of lotuses). The lotuses in fact were in the Acchoda lake. It appeared, therefore, that the lotuses in the lake had jumped up into the sky (गगनतलं उत्पतितैः). The अंशुसन्तान is compared to a bed of blue lotuses. This is certainly an overbold fancy. विकृति = transformation, change, excitement. As he was in love, he seemed to have undergone a change. द्विगुणीकृतः मदनस्य आवेशः यस्याम्—the sway of passion was re-doubled. अवर्णनयोग्या—that cannot be described. The state of a person in love defies description. It is some inexplicable passion. Cf. परिच्छेदातीतः सकल-वचनानामविषयः । पुनर्जन्मन्यस्मिन्ननुभवपथं यो न गतवान् ॥ विवेकप्रध्वंसादुपचित-महामोहगहनो । विकारः कोऽप्यन्तर्जडयति च तापं च तनुते ॥ मालतीमाधव I. 20. Cf. also for the description of a person struck by love परिच्छेदव्यकिर्भवति न पुरःस्थेऽपि विषये । भवत्यभ्यस्तेऽपि स्मरणमतथाभावविरसम् । न संतापच्छेदो हिमसरसि वा चन्द्रमसि वा । मनो निष्ठाशून्यं भ्रमति च किमप्यालिखति च ॥ Ibid I. 21. अनेक etc. अनेकानि यानि सुरते (co-habitation) समागमस्य लास्यानि लीलाश्च (sport.) तदुपदेशस्य उपाध्यायः (preceptor). ईदृशेषु व्यक्तिकेषु in contacts of this kind. The sight of a person overpowered by love (i) oozes out a stream of रतिरस (juice of love), (ii) showers ambrosia (अमृत), (iii) is half closed (मुकुलित) on account of intoxication, (iv) languid on account of exhaustion (खेद), (v) heavy due to sleepiness, (vi) has a fickle pupil which is dull and rolling through the force of joy (आनन्दभर) मन्थरतरतार-सञ्चारिणी—आनन्दस्य यः भरः तेन मन्थरालसा एवंविधा तरन्ती तारा यस्मिन् एतादृशः संचारः विद्यते यस्याः । and (vii) resplendent with incessantly (अतिभृत) moving eyebrows अनिभृता चञ्चला या झूलता तस्या उल्लासो विद्यते यस्याः । चक्षुषेव अनक्षरं—only by the eye and without words or letters. The language of Love is not said in words.

प्राप्तप्रसरा.....श्रूयताम् । प्राप्तप्रसरा—who had caught an opportunity. She approached his companion and asked him. Lovers do not approach their object of love directly but through their companions. Dushyanta also first approached Priyamvadā and Anasūyā. किं नाम्नस्तरोः etc.—what's the name of the tree a blossom of which he has placed on his ear. जनयति हि—The idea is अस्याः.....गन्धः मे मनसि महत् कौतुकं जनयति ।

विहस्य—The youth smiled at the innocence of the girl. असाधारण-सौरभ—of extraordinary fragrance.

P. 21—LL. 6—20.

अस्ति खलु.....सोऽयम् । सुरासुरसिद्धवृन्दवन्दितचरणयुगलः—सुराणां (gods) असुराणां सिद्धानां च वृन्देन (collection) वन्दितं चरणयुगलं (two feet) यस्य. सुरासुरलोकसुन्दरीहृदयानन्दभरम्—सुरासुरलोकानां सुन्दरीणां हृदयेभ्यो आनन्दकरम्. ऐरावतमदजलबिन्दुबद्धचन्द्रकशतखचितजलां—ऐरावतस्य मदजलबिन्दुभिः बद्धानि चन्द्रकशतानि तेन खचितं जलं यस्याः । whose waters were as it were studded with hundreds of peacocks' eyes (चन्द्रकशत) due to the drops of ichor. On the body of Airāvata were drops of ichor which, when they fell down into the water of the celestial river, looked like eyes in the peacock's tail. This qualifies मन्दाकिनी. हरहाससितस्रोतसम्. The stream of which was (white) like the laughter of Śiva (which is also white). विकचसहस्रपत्रपुण्डरीकोपविष्टा—who (i. e. लक्ष्मी) was resting on a full-blown lotus of thousand leaves etc. आनन्दबाष्पभरतद्भ्रतरलतारेण—आनन्दबाष्पभरस्य तरङ्गाः तैः तरले तारे (pupil) यस्य—qualifying eyes (लोचनयुगलेन). जृम्भिका etc.—जृम्भिकायाः (yawning) आरम्भः तेन मन्थरं यत् मुखं तस्मिन् विन्यस्तं हस्तपल्लवं यया—who had placed her hand on her face that was languid as she was just yawning. समासादितः etc. समासादितं सुरते यो समागमः तस्य सुखं यया. बालजनोचिताः सर्वाः क्रियाः Note again the reference to the rites performed on the birth of a child. आगृहीतसकलविद्याकलापं—who had mastered the entire collection of sciences. सोऽयम् He is that.

इयं च.....तत्सर्वमावेदितम् । सुरासुरैः मथ्यमानात् क्षीरसागरात् उद्गतः—Pārijāta was one of the fourteen 'gems' extracted from the milky ocean, the other thirteen being लक्ष्मी, कौस्तुभ, सुरा, धन्वन्तरि, चन्द्रमा, कामधेनु, सुरेश्वरगज, रम्भादिदेवांगनाः, सप्तमुख अश्व, विषे, हरिधनुः, शंख and अमृत, पारिजात—पारमस्थास्तीति पारी समुद्रस्तत्र जातः तस्य समुद्रोत्पन्नत्वात्। This tree first came into the possession of Indra from whom it was wrested by Kṛṣṇa later on and planted in the yard of his beloved सत्यभामा.—व्रतविरुद्धं संसर्गं—contact with him which is against his vow of penance. Brahmacharis are forbidden from decorating their bodies. Cf. वर्जयेन्मधुमांसगन्धमाल्याभरणदिवास्वप्नाभ्यञ्जनयानोपानक्छत्र etc.—गौतमधर्मसूत्र. The next few paragraphs are very easy to understand as the author is not using long compounds and far-fetched references. चतुर्दशी—Fourteenth day of the latter half of a month which is known as शिवरात्रिः. On that day a fast is observed and Lord Śiva is propitiated at night. The शिवरात्रि

in the month of Māgha is known as महाशिवरात्रिः. नन्दनवन—Name of Indra's garden. मधुमास etc.—मधुमासस्य (month of Chaitra) लक्ष्म्या दत्तः ललितहस्तः यस्यै—This and the following adjectives qualify नन्दनवन-देवतया. बकुल etc.—who had a garland of Bakula as girdle. कुसुमपल्लव—‘whose body’ (विग्रह) was covered all over by garland of flowers and leaves worn round the neck and hanging up to the knees—(आजातु). नवचूतांकुरकर्णपूरया—who had the fresh sprouts of mango tree (चूत) as an ear-ornament (कर्णपूर). पुष्पासव etc.—intoxicated with the drinking of the honey in flowers. अवतंसविलासदुर्ललिता—who is naughty (दुर्ललिता) inasmuch as it desires to be placed on the ear. व्रजतु etc.—The पारिजात will have got the fruit of its existence if the मञ्जरी was placed on the ear by him. चायम् etc. is to be separated as च अयम्. आत्मरूप-स्तुति-वाद-त्रपा-अवनमित-विलोचनः—आत्मनः रूपस्य स्तुतिवादः तस्मात् या त्रपा (लज्जा) तया अवनमिते विलोचने येन—this shows how modest Puṇḍarika was. त्रपा = bashfulness. The episode tells महाश्वेता how the पारिजात-मञ्जरी came to be on पुण्डरीक's ear.

इत्युक्तवति.....कण्ठाभरणतामनयम् ! Now Puṇḍarika himself addresses Mahāśweta. He offered that garland to her as she seemed to be very curious about it. इत्युक्त्वा—This is a brilliant idea. Puṇḍarika removed the मञ्जरी from his ears and placed it on Mahāśweta's. The bees hovering around it were disturbed and so made some noise. The poet imagines that the noise was a request for union on the part of Puṇḍarika conveyed to the ear by the bees. मम तु etc.—The touch of पुण्डरीक's hand horripilated her body and there was, as it were, another मञ्जरी in her ear. स च etc. He too was horripilated by the touch of her cheeks and he could not know how the rosary of beads fell down from his hand. Along with the rosary fell his sense of shame (लज्जा). This is an instance of सहोक्ति अलंकार inasmuch as the fall of the rosary was different, from that of ‘shame’ and yet both are mentioned together. अथाहं etc.—Before the rosary touched the ground, महाश्वेता caught it and wore it round her neck (कण्ठाभरणतामनयम्). She then enjoyed the pleasure of her neck being clasped in the hands by him, दर्शितापूर्वहार-लतालीलां—that showed an extraordinary grace of a garland. Here the poet brings out, in a characteristic fashion, the absent-mindedness of Puṇḍarika. He could not notice the rosary that fell down and that was worn round her neck by Mahāśewetā.

P. 23. LL. 2-9.

इत्थंभूते.....इवावादीत् । छत्रग्राहिणी—Umbrella-bearer, maid-servant इत्थंभूते व्यतिकरे—when things came to such a pass. प्रथमांकुशपात—the first piercing by a goad. Mahāśwetā fell like a young female-elephant who is first pierced. As she was in love, the call to duty was piercing to her. लावण्यामृत etc.—[These are adjectives qualifying the word इष्टि] submerged as it were in the abyss of beauty (लावण्य) अमृतपङ्क is certainly a bad expression. कपोल etc.—कपोलयोः यत् पुलकं तस्य कण्टकानां जालके लग्ना—caught in the thorny thicket in the cheeks that were horripilated. मदन etc.—as if tied down by the arms of मदन. कीलित=fixed down or pinned. Cf. सा नश्चेतसि कीलितेव ।—मालतीमाधव V. 10. स्यूत= sewn. धैर्यस्खलितं—धैर्यस्य स्खलितं. प्रकटितप्रणयकोप—showing feigned anger.
 प्रणयकोप is an instance of oxymoron. It is not 'affectionate anger' but mock or assumed wrath. Vide Mudrārākṣasa, Act I, where Chāṇakya says to चन्दनदास “बलवान् सुहृदि प्रणयकोपः । तत्किमपराधं ते राक्षसेन ।”

P. 23 LL. 10-23.

सखे पुण्डरीक.....हृदयम् । क्षुद्रजनक्षुण्ण—trodden by lowly persons.
 प्राकृत इव—like an ordinary person. आद्येन्द्रियोपप्लवः—the first disturbance of the senses. अद्य is another reading which makes the meaning clearer. If we take आद्य it is to be connected with उपप्लव and not इन्द्रिय. वशित्व—control of the senses. सुखपराङ्मुखता—antipathy (lit. turning one's face away from) to pleasures. भोगानामुपर्यरुचिः— aversion for enjoyment and pleasures. The students will find this paragraph very easy to understand. यौवनानुशासन—regulating (अनुशासन) of the (extravagances of) youth. भवादृशाः—persons like you. रागाभिषंगattachment to passion. कथं etc.—How is it that you did not even understand that you dropped the rosary. अहो विगतचेतनत्वम्—O what a wonderful loss of sense? (i.e. good sense). अपहृता. etc.—This is a good idea. The friend says: This rosary has already been snatched away by her. Now she is taking away your heart. Hold that at least now !

इत्येवमभिधीयमानश्च.....निस्पन्दमतिष्ठम् । उपजातलज्जः—उपजाता लज्जा यस्मिन् किं मामन्यथा संभावयसि. Why do you think that I am changed (for the worse)—why do you misunderstand my action? न मर्षयामि = I shall not tolerate. अक्षमालाग्रहणापराध—अक्षमालायाः ग्रहणं तदेव अपराधः । Saying

thus he addressed महाश्वेता while his moon-like face (i) was attractive on account of assumed wrath, (ii) looked the more charming by his terrible frown that was brought in with effort (this suggests that the frown was not real but only an assumed one) and (iii) the lower lip of which was throbbing with a desire to kiss.—चञ्चले—O you impetuous girl. पदात् पदमपि not even one step. When महाश्वेता was thus addressed she took out her necklace (not the rosary) and handed to over him. पुण्डरीक did not understand that it was not the rosary but महाश्वेता's necklace. मकरध्वज etc. मकरध्वजस्य लास्यारम्भलीला तस्यां पुष्पाणां अञ्जलिः—handful of flowers offered at the beginning of the sportive dance of Cupid. शून्यहृदयस्य = whose heart was vacant (as he was absent-minded). स्वेदसलिलस्नातापि—though I was bathed in the water of perspiration. निम्नगेव प्रतीपं नीयमाना—like a stream pushed against it. So she was very much attracted towards him : but her friends and mother dragged her back home. कन्यान्तःपुरं—girls' harem. तद्विरह-विधुरा—troubled by separation. किं आगतस्मि etc. This is the description of महाश्वेता's condition. प्रस्तुतालापा—talking coherently. सर्वं नावगच्छम्—I did not understand this. अविज्ञातमदनवृत्तान्ता—अविज्ञातः मदनवृत्तान्तः यथा. कुमारीपुरप्रासादं—A palace for girls. निवारिताशेषपरिजनप्रवेशा—निवारितः अशेषपरिजनानां प्रवेशः यथा. मणिजालगवाक्षनिक्षिप्तमुखी—placing my face in the window with a jewelled lattice. तत्सनाथतया प्रसाधितां—as if it was decked as he was there. महारत्ननिधानाधिष्ठितामिव—as if it was full of a treasure of excellent jewels. अमृतरस etc.—flooded by the ocean of nectar. She thus remained staring at that quarter. She was anxious to enquire about him of the breeze coming from that direction, the fragrance of wild flowers, the sound of birds. A lover is not careful to distinguish between animate and inanimate objects. Cf. Vikramorvaśīya, Act. IV—in which विक्रम asks all manner of objects viz. नीलकण्ठ, परभृत, राजहंस, चक्रवाक, मधुकर etc.—Act IV of विक्रमोर्वशीय is a masterpiece from this point of view. तपःक्लेशाय अपि स्पृहयन्ती—desiring even the troubles of penance as he was undergoing them and as they were dear to him. तस्मिन्त्या (i) out of love for him or (ii) because the मौनव्रत was dear to him—गृहीतमौनवृता—She had taken to silence on account of her love for him. She was silent because she did not want other thoughts to bother her. स्मरजनितपक्षपाता—Partiality towards him which was generated by love (for him). तत्परिमहात् etc.—This and the following clauses qualify अध्यारोपयन्ती—attributing—अग्राम्यता i.e. Civility to the garb of ascetic—as he had accepted it; loveliness to youth as he was young; attractiveness—(मनोहरता) to पारिजात flower, charm to the heaven as he was a resident of heaven, the invincible nature to cupid due to his attractive form (रूपसम्पदा). The clauses following qualify तस्यैवाभिमुखी—like a Kamalini before the Sun, the boundary line of the ocean before the moon and pea-hen (मयूरी) before the cloud. तद्विरहातुर etc.—तस्य विरहेण आतुरं यजीवितं तस्य उद्गमाद् (going away) रक्षावली (charm). The rosary was, as it were, a charm to protect her life that was likely to pass away. Note the alliteration in रक्षावलीमिव-क्षावलीम्. प्रस्तुत etc.—प्रस्तुतः तद्रहस्यालापः यया—qualifying मञ्जरी. The Mañjari was as it were telling her his secret message. कदम्बमुकुलकर्ण-पूरायमाणेन—कदम्बस्य (a kind of tree) मुकुलं (bud) एव कर्णपरः तदाचरति इति—qualifying रोमाञ्चजालक. कण्टकितैककपोलफलका—whose broad cheek had horripilation thereon.

अथ तांबूल.....नीतः ताम्बूलकरङ्कवाहिनी—betel-box-bearer.—a maid-servant. पश्चाच्चिरादिवागस्य—coming back after a long time. सुरतरुकुसुम-मञ्जरी—the blossom of the celestial tree. आत्मनो रक्षन् दर्शनम्—trying to avoid being seen. अतिनिमृतपदः with extremely silent steps. कुसुमितलतासन्तानगह्वरान्तरेण—under the covering (अन्तर) of a thick line of blossomed creepers. He made enquiries of Taralikā about Mahāśwetā. गौर्या समुत्पन्ना—[Note the use of locative] born from Gaurī. सकलगन्धर्व etc.—सकलानां गन्धर्वाणां मुकुटेषु याः मणिशलाकाः (jewelled pins) तासां शिखरेभ्यः उल्लेखेन (rubbing) मसृणितानि (rendered glossy) चरणानां नखचक्राणि यस्य. The idea is that all the Gandharvas bowed before him and the lustre of the jewels in their coronets rendered the nails of his feet glossy. प्रणयप्रसुप्त etc.—प्रणये याः प्रसुप्ताः गन्धर्वकामिन्यः तासां कपोलस्था याः पत्रलताः (marks on cheek or other parts of the body) ताभिः लाम्बितं भुजतरोः शिखरं यस्य. There were marks on his huge arms. The marks came from the paintings on the cheeks of sleeping Gandharva damsels. पादपीठीकृत etc. who made the lotus-like hand of लक्ष्मी (Goddess of wealth) as his foot-stool. So glorious was he that Laksmi was lying near his feet. Taralikā is describing what he said and did. अविस्वादिनी—one who talks incoherently. उपरचिताञ्जलि-पुण्या—उपरचितं अञ्जलिपुटं यया. निखिलकल्मषापहारिणी—That removes all the sins (qualifying दष्टि). The great do not even favour us with their sight, much less (किं पुनः) with their command. विश्रब्धं—confidently—without any reserve. Cf. विश्रब्धं हरिणाश्वरन्यचकिता देशागतप्रत्ययात् ।—स्वभवासवदत्तम् I. 15 also विश्रब्धैः क्रियतां बराहसतिभिः मुस्ताक्षितिः पल्लवे । शाकुन्तल I. निकटवर्तिनः—that was nearby. निष्पीड्य

शिलातले having crushed it on a slab of stone. गन्धगजमदपरिमलेन the fragrance of Tamāla is like that of the rut of a scented elephant. गन्धगज is a scented elephant against whom other elephants dare not stand. यस्य गन्धं समाग्राय न तिष्ठन्ति प्रतिद्विपाः । also cf. शमयति हि गजानन्यान् गन्धद्विपः कलभोऽपि सन् । विक्रमोर्वशीय V. 12. विपाठ्य पट्टिकां—tearing a piece; स्वहस्तकमलकनिष्ठिकानखशिखरेण (He tore with) the end of the nail of the little finger of his lotus-like hand. अहं तु etc.—Mahāśwetā felt that she enjoyed the pleasure of touch by merely hearing his message; it resulted in the horripilation of the whole body though it was only an object of hearing. आवेद्यमाना—filled up. The text of Puṇḍarika's letter was written in a stanza. Mahāśwetā had taken away पुण्डरीक's rosary and left her necklace with him. This he realised after she had left. He therefore wrote to her "you have taken away (दूरं) my heart's desire (मानसजन्मा) like a swan tempted by the necklace white like a lotus fibre (विससित)". The stanza can also be taken as "as a swan tempted by a creeper white like a lotus-stalk (or pearl) to whom the proper quarter is shown (दर्शिता आशा यस्यै)." The words मुक्तालतया = (i) necklace of pearls and (ii) creeper (white like) a pearl, or pearl creeper दर्शिताशाः = (i) to whom hope (आशा) is shown and (ii) to whom (the proper) quarter (आशा) is shown; and मानसजन्मा = (i) born in the mind (मानस) and (ii) born in the Mānasa lake. The stanza thus has a plain meaning and a hidden meaning too.

अनया च मे.....मत्यवाहयम्—The first sentence is अनया च मे दृष्ट्यादोषविकारोपजयः सुतरामक्रियत स्मरातुरस्य मे मनसः । The intervening clauses are brought in by way of simile. दिक्लोहभ्रान्त्या इव प्रनष्टवर्त्मनः—like one who has lost his way on losing his bearings. A man who has a मोह (doubt) about the proper direction is bound to miss the direction. दिक्लोहभ्रान्त्या is parallel to अनया च मे दृष्ट्या...प्रनष्टवर्त्मनः is parallel to मनसः बहुलनिशया etc.—like a blind man on a dark night. The idea is that a blind man is already incapable of seeing. A dark night would aggravate the situation and he has then no hope of seeing at all. Similarly Mahāśwetā's mind was already स्मरातुर and the latter only helped to worsen the situation. All these similes are to be understood in this sense. जिह्वोच्छिन्ना=cutting off the tongue. A dumb person cannot talk; but removing his tongue means depriving him of the last chance of being able to speak. इन्द्रजालिकपिच्छिका—(waving) of magician's feathers. A magician waves a bundle of feathers in his hands and misleads the audience by playing some trick upon them. अतत्त्वदर्शिन्—One who does not see the real state of things. ज्वरप्रलापप्रवृत्ति—tending to prattle while in fever. असम्बद्धभाषिन्—one who talks incoherently. दुष्टनिद्रा=fatal drowsiness—A man who is poisoned (विषविह्वल) is sure to die. But if he then goes to sleep his death is absolutely certain. लोकायतिकविद्या—The science of materialists. A man who has no caste or religion will not lead a religious life. If he is then initiated into materialism he is bound to be definitely irreligious. लोकायतिकs are Indian Materialists who believe that body is soul (देहात्मवादिन्) and that there is nothing beyond this life and that therefore one should try his best to enjoy as much as possible (यावज्जीवेत् सुखं जीवेत्, कुरु कृत्वा घृतं पिबेत् । भस्मीभूतस्य देहस्य पुनरागमनं कुतः ॥) The founder of this school was Kaṇva or Chāravāka. दुष्टवेशक्रिया—by the action of being possessed by a demon. पिशाचग्रह—possessed by a ghost. सरित्=river. It gets agitated by a flood as water overflows it. तां च द्वितीयदर्शनेन etc.—Mahāśwetā thought that Taralikā who got a chance to see Puṇḍarika for a second time was extremely lucky and (i) had collected huge merit (ii) had enjoyed the pleasure of residing in the heavens (iii) had a superintending deity within her (iv) had secured a boon (v) had drunk nectar (अमृत) or (vi) was with kingdom of all the three worlds.

सादरमाभाषणा—She was talking with her respectfully because Taralikā was luckier than her inasmuch as she got another opportunity to see Puṇḍarika. Mahāśwetā was desperately in love and whatever had a seeming relation to Puṇḍarika was great in her eyes. अलकलताभङ्गः curls of her creeper-like hair (अलक) विपरीतमिव परिजनस्यापि सम्बन्धं—Mahāśwetā was in fact the mistress and Taralikā her maid-servant. But now the relation was topsy-turvy (विपरीत) and Taralikā was considered by Mahāśwetā as her mistress. प्रतिषिद्धाशेषपरिजन—forbidding entrance to all the attendants.

Here is described the appearance which nature had put on at the time when Mahāśwetā's छत्रग्राहिणी came to her to communicate the arrival of Kapilajala. The latter had come there to demand the rosary which Mahāśwetā had carried away without the knowledge of its owner viz. Puṇḍarika. The imagery depicted here is certainly of a high order. Bāṇa is, indeed, an adept in the art of description. He successfully creates before the mind of his readers a kaleidoscopic view of the object that he describes. Cf. in this light the descriptions of Mahāśwetā and Puṇḍarīka above.

कृतरागसंविभागे etc. The principal sentence here is अथ मदीयेनैव*छत्रग्राहिणी समागत्याकथयत् । The series of loc. absolutes should be better split up into different clauses in order to avoid any confusion due to the complexity of the sentence. Thus अथ मदीयेनैव.....रविबिम्बे. अथ—is used in more senses than one for which vide Apte's guide § 244. Its meaning here is no doubt "afterwards or then". But the spirit of the passage would better be borne out by interpreting अथ as "in due course". कृतसंविभागे—कृतः रागस्य संविभागः येन तस्मिन् (रविबिम्बे); राग redness, passion; संविभाग for सं+वि+भज्, 1 U.—"share, division or partition." The idea is—the disc of the setting sun was naturally red. The heart of Mahāśwetā was flushed with passion which the poetic convention represents as red: hence her heart was also red. She, therefore, fancies that the solar disc had, as it were, taken the redness from her heart; लोहितायति—Loc. sing of the pres. part from the Denominative form from लोहित. Such forms are formed with the addition of the क्यच् (Parasmaipada) and क्यङ् (Atmanepada) affixes to the nominal base and have the sense of आचार. Cf. रामायते, अन्तःपुरीयति. etc. सरागदिवसकर.....लक्ष्म्याम्—The fact is that the light of the sun was fading away as he was setting but here is given a poetic representation of the simple and everyday natural phenomenon. The Splendour of the Day-light is fancied to be a lady becoming pale being oppressed by pangs of love. A love-sick person prepares a bed of lotuses to allay these agonies. In the evening the day-lotuses were naturally closing. This is looked upon as the आतपलक्ष्मी preparing for herself a bed of lotuses to soothe herself. दिवसकर is the Sun. He is सराग lit. "full of redness", poetically "full of passion". आतपलक्ष्मी was enamoured of her lord viz., the Sun even like a lady enamoured of her lover when he is सराग. "रागः आरुण्यं रतिः च तेन सह वर्तमानः यः दिवसकरः सूर्यः तस्य दर्शनेन तस्मिन् अनुरक्ता" या आतपलक्ष्मीः तस्याम् । कृतकमलशयनाम्—कृतं कमलानि एव कमलानां वा शयनं यया तस्याम्—qualifying आतपलक्ष्म्याम्. गैरिकगिरि.....किरणेषु—गैरिका गिरयः तेषु सलिलस्य प्रपाताः तैः पाटलेषु—qualifying किरणेषु. पाटल—"red, tawny, crimson". गैरिक—a kind of red mineral. गिरौ भवं गैरिकम्. In the evening the sun is said to withdraw his rays from everywhere—mountains, cascades, beds of lotuses etc. The cascades on the mountains full of red clay are red being mixed with the red chalk; the rays of the setting sun are also red but here the redness is said to have been imparted to them by the (red) streams where they had fallen. During the day the rays were, as though, sporting in the beds of lotuses but now they are being withdrawn by the sun. They, therefore, appear to be rising from the lotus-beds even like herds of wild elephants which, also, like to sport in beds of lotuses and get up from them at the end of their sport. गगनावतारवासरे—गगनात् अवतारः ततः यः विश्रामः तस्मिन् लालसा येषां ते—qualifying वाजिनां below. लालसा—“ardent longing, eager desire”. Throughout the whole day the sun is supposed to be marching speedily in his chariot along the vault of the sky. He has seven horses which by the long march are naturally fatigued and as such are desirous of rest. They can enjoy it only at the end of the day when the sun would set. They are delighted at the approach of evening and express their joy by neighing (हर्षहेवारव). The echoes of their neighing enter the caves of the Meru mountain. Meru is the name of a fabulous mountain round which, it is believed, all the luminaries rotate. The sun, being one of them, moves round this mountain. The day (drawing to its close) and the echoes of the rapturous neighing of the Sun's horses are both said to enter the caverns of the Meru mountain. मुकुलितरक्त.....पद्मिनीषु—मुकुलितानि रक्तपङ्कजानि तेषां पुटानि तत्र प्रविष्टाः मधुकराणां आवल्यः यासु. This and the following two adjectives qualify पद्मिनीषु. This clause is a fine example of उत्प्रेक्षा (“संभावनमथोत्प्रेक्षा प्रकृतस्य परेण यत् ”) and not of उपमा as is understood by some. With the setting sun the lotuses began to close their petals. As the poets fancy, the bees that had already entered the lotuses get caught within. The bees being dark fill the inside (heart) of the lotuses with darkness. It is here imagined that the lotus-creepers—the beloveds of the Sun—had fainted due to the separation from their lover viz., the sun and closed their eyes (petals—प्रारब्धं निमीलनं दलसंकोचः—अक्षिसंकोचः—याभिः तासु). Under this condition the heart is full of darkness—which aspect is fancifully represented by the bees. “The darkened yet loving heart” is not here compared to the bees but the heart of the Padminis is said to be full of darkness because of the presence of the bees inside their petals. This darkness, the author says was the result of the swoon. It should be noted here that the Padminis stand for loving ladies who faint away at the departure of their lovers. When one faints, his heart is said to be dark. There is again a pun on the word Padmini. Padmini is one of the four classes of women described by writers on erotics, the other three being चित्रिणी, इस्तिनी and शङ्किनी. Padmini is defined as “भवति कमलनेत्रा नासिकाध्वजान्त्रा । अविरलकुचयुग्मा चारुक्षेत्री कृशाङ्गी । मृदुवचन-

सुशीला गीतवाद्यानुरक्ता । सकलतनुसुवेशा पद्मिनी पद्मगन्धा ॥ "रतिमञ्जरी. विरहमूर्च्छा—“विरहः (रवेः इति शेषः) तेन मूर्च्छां तयान्धकारितं हृदयं यासां एवंविधेषु (पद्मिनीषु)”. ग्रासीकृत.....युगलेषु—ग्रासीकृताः याः सामान्यमृणाललताः तासां विवराणि तेभ्यः संक्रामितानि परस्परहृदयानि तानि आदाय । रथाङ्गनामन्—रथाङ्गं चक्रं नाम यस्य स रथाङ्गनामा चक्रवाकः “The ruddy goose”. He is also called चक्राङ्गः. Here is stated another excellent poetic fancy. The चक्रवाकः which are held to be patterns of fidelity in conjugal love, are believed to be separated from their mates at night as a result of a curse pronounced on them by Rāma. Rāma was piteously lamenting over the loss of Sītā. Just, then, he found a pair of the Chakravāka birds sporting. He believed that they were laughing at his miserable fortune and in order to reduce the class, to which the birds belonged, to partially the same plight as he was in, he cursed them to remain separated till dawn every night. The convention of the separation of the Chakravāka birds at night has been inherited by the poets and the fancy in which Bāṇa indulges here is based upon this poetic heritage. The pairs of the Chakravāka birds have been looked upon as lovers who before their separation carry with them some memento to remind them of the happy time they passed in each other's company. Bāṇa represents the Chakravāka birds as lovers par excellence. Before their parting the pairs had held in their mouth a common lotus-stalk which phenomenon is not uncommon. The lotus-stalk is a porous substance. The poet, therefore, fancies that the pairs had exchanged their hearts through the interstices at the separation at night. What can be so good a memento for the lovers as the exchange of hearts ! For the separation of the Chakravākas cf. the following—

“एसावि पिण्ण विणा गमेइ रअणि विसाहदीहअरं । गरुअं पि विरहदुक्खं आसाबन्धो सहावेदि ॥” शाकुन्तल IV. 16. “निनाय सात्यन्ताहिमोक्षिरानिलाः सहस्यरात्रीरुदवासतत्परा । परस्पराकन्दिनि चक्रवाकयोः पुरो वियुक्ते मिथुने कृपावती ॥” कुमार. V. 26. “सरसि नलिनीपत्रेणापि तामावृतविग्रहां । ननु सहचरीं दूरे मत्वा विरौषि समुत्सुकः ॥ विक्रमो. IV. 20. ग्रासीकृत—This is technically known as the च्वि form derived according to “कृब्वस्तियोगे संपद्यकर्तरि च्विः” or “अभूततद्भाव इति वक्तव्यम्”. The च्वि form is used to denote a thing which is not something else but which becomes or is looked upon as some other thing. According to this, the use of the च्वि-form should be metaphorical but this is not observed in practice. Its use in the present clause is not metaphorical for the lotus-stalk had actually become the ग्रास of the चक्रवाक-pairs. So also in the following examples the use of the च्वि-form is not restricted to its metaphorical sense. “स्वल्पीभूते सुंचरितफले स्वर्णिणां गां गतानाम्” मेघ. I. 30. “शुक्लापाङ्गैस्सजलनयनैः स्वागतीकृत्य केकाः ibid. आयुष्मन् उद्धातिनी भूमिरिति मया रश्मिसंयमनाद् रथस्य मन्दीकृतो वेगः।” शाकु. I. The correct use of च्वि is best illustrated in “कोऽयं भोः निभृतं तपोवनमिदं ग्रामीकरोत्याश्रया।” स्वप्न. I. 3. or in “अमुं पुरः पश्यसि देवदारुं पुत्रीकृतोऽसौ वृषभध्वजेन।” रघु. II. 36. सामान्य can either be taken as an adverb or as an adjective qualifying मृणाललता. As it stands in the compound the latter alternative is of course preferable. मुनिकुमारयोरन्यतरो—One of the two ascetic-youths. The छत्रग्राहिणी evidently means Kapīñjala and not Puṇḍarīka for she had accompanied Mahāśwetā when the latter had gone for her bath to the lake. Cf. “इत्थंभूते च व्यतिकरे छत्रग्राहिणी मामवोचत्” above. The छत्रग्राहिणी referred to here is the one who had gone with Mahāśwetā to the lake. The use of the word अन्यतरः suggests this. Bāṇa has not specifically mentioned the name of the मुनिकुमार here for had he done so there would not have been the ground to paint the impatience of Mahāśwetā to meet the the boy-sage. As the name of the मुनिकुमार is left to be imagined only, Mahāśwetā believes that it must be Puṇḍarīka himself who was at the gate to demand the rosary. She is, therefore, eager to meet him.

अहं मुनिकुमार.....मित्यवोचम्।

Kapīñjala is ushered in and received by Mahāśwetā with due hospitality. Desirous of communicating something to Mahāśwetā, he is taken aback by the presence of Taralikā. Mahāśwetā notices his hesitation but allays his doubts by declaring that Taralikā is her confidante. He is requested to proceed with his mission.

मुनिकुमारनामग्रहणात्—‘By the (mere) mention of the term मुनिकुमार. The term ‘(मुनिकुमार)’ had become too familiar to Mahāśwetā since her return from the lake. She had, as it were, taken a fancy for the term. When it was mentioned by the छत्रग्राहिणी the whole of her body, as though, bristled through joy and thinking that it must be Puṇḍarīka who is come there, she becomes impatient to meet him. Her उत्कण्ठा is shown in ‘स्थानस्थिताऽपि गतेव द्वारदेशम्’—She flew to the gate though she was confined to her seat in her room. Here is विरोध. How can a person do two mutually contradictory actions—sitting and running—at one and the same time? But the विरोध is only apparent for one action viz., sitting is a physical one while the other viz., running is performed mentally. The figure of speech is known as विरोधाभास which is defined as “विरोधः सोऽविरोधेऽपि विरुद्धत्वेन यद्वचः ।”. समुपजाततदागमनशङ्का—समुपजाता तस्य नाम पुण्डरीकस्य आगमनस्य शङ्का यस्याः। शङ्का here may mean either suspicion or hope or expectation. This is the cause of her eagerness. The passage मुनिकुमार...शङ्का has a natural touch since it finely brings out the eagerness of a beloved to meet her lover. As ill-luck would have it, the मनोरथs of a lover are seldom accomplished. Mahāśwetā is disappointed at the sight of Kaṣiñjala but could not show it on her face because Kaṣiñjala was the friend of Puṇḍarika, the object of her love. कञ्चुकिन्—‘An attendant on the women’s apartment, a chamberlain’. He is a learned old Brahmin, an accomplished person and an expert in superintending the royal house-hold, especially the harem. Bharata defines him as “अन्तःपुरचरो वृद्धो विप्रो गुणगणान्वितः । सर्वकार्य-कुशलः कञ्चुकीत्यभिधीयते ॥ जरावैकल्ययुक्तेन विशेद् गात्रेण कञ्चुकी । Cf. also Matrgupta’s definition—ये नित्यं सत्यसपत्नाः कामदोषविवर्जिताः । ज्ञानविज्ञानकुशलाः कञ्चुकीयास्तु ते स्मृताः ॥”. अथ मुहूर्तादिव.....मपश्यम्—The principal sentence is अथ मुहूर्तादिव तं तस्य (पुण्डरीकस्य).....अनुरूपं सखायं..... कपिञ्जलनामानं.....अपश्यम्. The sentence describes Kaṣiñjala as he was being ushered in by the age-old chamberlain. Kaṣiñjala was the worthy companion of Puṇḍarika. The friendship of the two was as good as the association of रूप and यौवन or of यौवन and मकरकेतन etc. The association of these pairs is invariable and delightful. The one follows the other as the shadow does the light. The friendship of Puṇḍarika and Kaṣiñjala was constant and अनुरूप. Hence the similes. The series illustrates the fig. of speech called रसानोपमा. कपिञ्जलनामानम्—It should be noted that Mahāśwetā could know the name of Kaṣiñjala during the latter’s talk with Puṇḍarika. Cf. “सखे कपिञ्जल किं मामन्यथा संभावयसि ।” जराधवलस्य.....बालातपम्—Kaṣiñjala was escorted by the grey-haired chamberlain. He appeared like the sun-shine following the moon-light. The chamberlain with his sparkling silvery hair and his serene complexion stands for the light of the moon and the refulgent young Kaṣiñjala is compared to the golden light of the young Sun. आतप primarily has the sense of heat, and secondarily it means ‘sun-shine’ and so the use of this word should be restricted to a light which is hot and should not be employed in connection with the cool light of the moon. Hence the expression चन्द्रातप is rather inappropriate. पर्याकुलमिव.....अनुपरताभिप्रेतम्—This speaks of the appearance of Kaṣiñjala. As something was weighing on his mind, he appeared to be greatly afflicted, dejected, absolutely blank. Supplicatory or suggesting some desire unfulfilled—"अनुपरतमपरिपूर्ण अभिप्रेतं वाञ्छितं यस्य". This anxiety of Kapiñjala could not escape the notice of Mahāśwetā. स्वयमासनमुपाहरम्—Mahāśwetā herself fetched a seat for Kapiñjala. This and the following two clauses speak of the modesty and culture of Mahāśwetā; ह with उप and आ also means to offer. बलादनिच्छतोऽपि.....चरणौ. Kapiñjala was reluctant to get his feet washed by Mahāśwetā because of the pressure on his mind: all the same Mahāśwetā insisted upon doing him the honour firstly because he was an ascetic and secondly he was the friend of Puṇḍarīka. The student should note here the social custom which curiously enough has persisted even to the present day in some districts. The villagers particularly are very keen on doing this signal honour to their guests. अन्यवधानायां भूमावेव—"On the bare ground". न विद्यते व्यवधानं यस्याः. व्यवधान means intervention, a screen, partition, cover or covering. Literally अन्य.....मावेव would mean 'between which (ground) and me nothing lay or intervened'. Therefore, 'on the uncovered or uncarpeted ground i.e. on the bare ground'. Kapiñjala was a person who merited respect. Mahāśwetā could not sit on a couch or some such seat for that would have meant showing discourtesy to him. To show respect to him, she sat on the bare ground. This, again, gives a fine touch in her character. अयमुद्धर्तमिव.....त्यवोचम्. Kapiñjala sat silent for a while either to grasp the situation or to compose himself, perturbed as he was over his friend's condition. There he saw Taralikā sitting by the side of Mahāśwetā. He could not disclose the purpose for which he had come there in the presence of Taralikā. The latter's presence, therefore, was undesirable. To show this to Mahāśwetā he simply cast a glance at Taralikā. Mahāśwetā could gather Kapiñjala's intention from his expression and assured him that he should not mind the presence of Taralikā for there was nothing in this world that she could not share with Taralikā. Taralikā was her confidante. Kapiñjala should not have any misgiving in his mind and should proceed with his mission without any reserve or hesitation. मुहुर्त—'a moment, any short period of time, an instant'. चक्षुरपातयत्—'threw a glance'. विदितः (कपिञ्जलस्य) अभिप्रायः आशयः यया सा विदिताभिप्राया. इष्टयैव. This is to be construed with विदिताभिप्राय. If it is construed with अवोचम् it would mean that Mahāśwetā did not speak so many words but through her gesture pointed out to Kapiñjala that Taralikā was her confidante and that he should proceed unreservedly. A person does communicate his आशय (motive) by twisting his eyes or contorting his face. But we cannot construe दृष्ट्या with अबोधम् for it would be unnatural. Mahāśwetā who had great regard for Kapīñjala could not be so rude as to communicate her request to Kapīñjala by a mere gesture. No such familiarity had grown between the two till then. It is better to connect दृष्ट्या with विदिताभिप्राया.

एवमुक्तश्च.....सुचिरं व्यचरम् ।

Rather reluctantly Kapīñjala begins. He hesitates to introduce the topic directly: he condemns the situation and continues the account of Puṇḍarīka beginning it with the departure of Mahāśwetā. He says that he left him in disgust and moved to another part of the forest but later he returned and did not find Puṇḍarīka there. Full of doubts and apprehensions he moved about for long in search of him.

वागेव मे.....त्रपया—‘ words refuse, through shame, to express what I have to say. At the strange condition of his friend Kapīñjala was overcome with shame. He could not break the ice i.e. introduce the topic of the pitiable state to which love had reduced his friend. His speech was restrained through shame. He was tongue-tied. अभिधेय—Pot. part. from धा with अभि—that which is ‘to be named or expressed’ विषय—‘scope, range or province’ क कन्दमूलफलाशी..... रागप्रायः प्रपञ्चः—The use of क.....क express great disparity between कन्दमूलफलाशी.....मुनिजनः on the one hand and अनुपशान्तजनोचितो..... प्रपञ्चः on the other. The ascetic-folks, peaceful and contented, are dead to all mundane matters. When Puṇḍarīka—one of the members of the ascetic clan—is about to be embedded into the meshes of worldly affairs, Kapīñjala finds it very difficult to reconcile this action of Puṇḍarīka with his asceticism. कन्दमूलफलानि अश्नाति यः स °फलाशी. वननिरतः—वने वनवासे निरतः—Fond of forest-residence or pleased or contented in the forest-dwellings. मुनिजनः—This does not refer to Puṇḍarīka alone but to the whole of the ascetic-kind. The word जन when used collectively means ‘the men, the people or the world in general’ Cf. “एवं जनो गृह्णाति” M. I. “सतीमपि जतिकुलैकसंश्रयां जनोऽन्यथा भर्तृमतीं विशङ्कते ।” शाकु. V. 17. The adjectives of मुनिजनः show how innocent the ascetics are and how meagre are their wants. अनुपशान्तोचितः—अनुपशान्तः रोषाद्युपयुक्तः यः जनः तस्य उचितः । विषयोपभोगाभिलाषकलुषः—विषयाः शब्दस्पर्शादयः तेषां उपभोगे आसेवने अभिलाषा तेन कलुषः । मन्मथ etc.—मन्मथस्य ये विविधाः विलासाः तैः संकटः संपूर्णः These epithets of प्रपञ्च bring out, in a nutshell, the nature of the worldly existence. It is full of love-affairs; it is crowded with amorous enjoyments and polluted by attachments to sensual objects. Only uncultured persons find pleasure in such a world. All worldly objects are transient and happiness evanescent. Hence the world is not meant for the sages engrossed in the pursuit of eternal bliss. It's no wonder, then, that Kapiñjala was astonished to find Puṇḍarīka hankering after momentary happiness. For the use of “क.....क Cf. क वयं क परोक्ष-मन्मथो मृगशावैः सममेधितो जनः ।” Sak. II. 18. अयलेनैव.....जनम्—ईश्वर does not here refer to the God of love who was the agent in reducing Puṇḍarīka to a sorry state but it refers to the Lord or the Controller of the world: without any effort on His part, the God makes a person a laughing stock. Cf. the observation of Shakespeare in his ‘King Lear’—

Are we to the Gods”.

न जाने.....विडम्बना—the tone of Kapiñjala is one of condemnation of Puṇḍarīka. Kapiñjala looks upon this behaviour of his friend as not only his mockery but a parody of asceticism. The whole of the ascetic world—and not the individual alone—would be blamed because one of its members had swerved from the noble and the righteous path. केवलमवश्य.....जायते—Before Kapiñjala approached Mahāśwetā he found himself between Scylla and Charibdis. He thought that he must inform Mahāśwetā of Puṇḍarīka's condition: if he does not, a grave calamity would follow: if, on the other hand, he does inform her, the order of asceticism would receive a severe set-back. But now he is determined to follow the first alternative for his duty as a friend enforces it upon him. अनर्थस्य उपनिपातः अकस्मात् पतनं अनर्थोपनिपातः. The grave calamity which Kapiñjala is afraid of is nothing but the premature death of Puṇḍarīka. अपर उपायो.....गतिर्नास्ति—These sentences have one and the same meaning. प्राणपरित्यागेनापि.....इति कथयामि. The life of a friend has to be saved at all costs. This is true at all times. The tie of friendship is irresistible. Kapiñjala (as we shall see below) tried every means at his disposal to dissuade his blundering friend but when those means fell flat on him, he (Kapiñjala) forgetting everything for the sake of his friend took courage in both hands and tried to unite the princess and the poor sage in marriage—a task impossible indeed but undertaken through the bond of friendship. अस्ति अवस्था: etc.—

This refers to the passage “सखे पुण्डरीक.....निवार्यतां हृदयम्” P. 23, LL. 10-23 in which Kapīñjala condemned the action of Puṇḍarīka in the presence of Mahāśwetā. तथा refers to all those exhortations of Kapīñjala to Puṇḍarīka. निष्ठुरम् is an adverb modifying अभिहितः “very severely or harshly” उपदर्शित—उपदर्शितः कोपः येन. Cf. प्रकटितप्रणय-कोपः above. Kapīñjala was very angry with Puṇḍarīka and he could not help putting his anger into his words. तथा चाभिघाय.....गमम्—Kapīñjala was so much disgusted with Puṇḍarīka that he could no longer stand near him and so he left him giving up that job of collecting flowers in which he was engaged just then. Cf. आत्मानुरूपेण सवयसापरेण देवतार्चनकुसुमान्युच्चिन्वता तापसकुमारेणानुगतम् । P. 17. LL. 10-11 उत्सृष्टकुसु—उत्सृष्टः कुसुमानां अवचयः येन; अवचय and अवचाय both mean the same thing viz—‘collecting or gathering’ and both have been equally used by writers like Bhāsa, Kālidāsa and Bhavabhūti in this sense. Pāṇini, however, has drawn a sharp distinction between them. “The root चि takes the krt affix घञ् which causes वृद्धि when it means taking by the hand and does not mean that ‘the thing is stolen’ according to “हस्तादने चोरस्तेये” पा० 3-3-40” अवचय then would mean gathering (flowers etc.), when they are not within reach i. e. when they are collected by means of a stick or stolen. The grammatically correct word to be used here is अवचाय or अपचाय or प्रचाय but the word actually used by Bāṇa is अवचय. It would thus be seen that the कादम्बरीकार also has not observed this distinction. Kapīñjala was not collecting flowers by means of a stick and the intention of stealing them was entirely foreign to his mind. अपयातायां.....संजातवितर्कः—This shows how reluctantly Kapīñjala had left Puṇḍarīka alone. When the former regained control over his mind, he could realise the rashness of his action in leaving his friend all alone particularly when the latter was much tormented with love. He, therefore, returns to see what Puṇḍarīka might be doing then. विटपा०—विटपैः अन्तरितः तिरोहितः विग्रहः यस्य; Kapīñjala desired to observe the movements of Puṇḍarīka without himself being seen by the latter; hence he hid himself in the branches of the trees. But when he did not find him there in the spot where he had left him, he becomes very anxious about the safety of his friend and begins searching for him, recalling all sorts of probabilities to explain the disappearance of his friend—(i) Puṇḍarīka might have followed Mahāśwetā as his mind was enthralled by Love. This was the most probable alternative but Kapīñjala could not be too sure of this (ii) Puṇḍarīka on finding Kaṭiṇjala approaching him, must have hid himself somewhere as he had not the courage of showing himself to Kaṭiṇjala, being ashamed of his behaviour. (iii) Puṇḍarīka must have left that spot to search for Kaṭiṇjala or (iv) left him in anger. आहोस्वित्, उत etc. are particles expressing doubt, uncertainty or guess and sometimes fear also. मदन० मदनेन परायत्ता चित्तवृत्तिः यस्य तेन तु.....दूयमानः—This shows the affection that Kaṭiṇjala had for Puṇḍarīka. स कदाचित् etc. other thoughts more fearful and dangerous than those now cross Kaṭiṇjala's mind. धैर्यं—धैर्यस्य स्खलनं तेन विलक्षः. विलक्षः for. वि + लक्ष—'To be confused, bewildered, ashamed or abashed.' अनिष्टमपि समाचरेत् 'he may do harm to himself i. e. he may commit suicide'; न हि.....हिया—'There is no act that may not be done through shame'. A person overcome with shame may do anything to avoid ignominy. आदरमकरवम्—started (seeking for him). Apte quotes this very passage and translates "made up my mind" अन्वेषमाणश्च.....सुचिरं व्यचरम्—The anxiety of Kaṭiṇjala increases more and more as he did not find his friend at the places where he searched for him. सहस्रं ह.....आशङ्कमान—Kaṭiṇjala began to entertain apprehensions of various untoward happenings befalling Puṇḍarīka because he had lost his nerve owing to his affection for Puṇḍarīka. Note the construction in यथायथा.....तथातथा for such construction vide note on § 297A Apte's guide. यथा and तथा are repeated in the sense of 'the more the more', 'the less the less'. Cf. "यथा यथा यौवनमतिचक्राम तथा तथा अनपत्यताजन्मा महानवर्धतास्य संतापः।" काद० 59 "यथा यथा मृतपुत्रं न चिन्तयिष्यसि तथा तथा तव दुःखं शमयेष्यति।" "यथा यथा अल्पीयसी पुत्रचिन्ता तथा तथा अल्पीयो दुःखम्।". तरुलतागहनानि..... सरः कूलानि—He carefully inspected the thickets of creepers, the bowers, the avenues of sandal trees and the banks of lakes because he knew that these were the haunts of lovers whose love is not reciprocated. He knew this possibly because of his wide reading. He must have known the theory of the critical science but never meant to apply it in practice. That Kaṭiṇjala was a man of wide reading could be best inferred from यदा पुनः पुनः शास्त्रोपदेशविशदैः.....वचोभिः below. निपुणम्—'vigilantly, carefully'. This can be construed either with विक्षमाणः or with दत्तदृष्टिः or with both by the देहलीदीपन्याय. सुचिरं व्यचरम्—note the assonance in this. This is the stylistic excellence of Bāṇa. The student can trace numberless illustrations of this peculiarity of Bāṇa's style in the portion that he has to study. चन्दनवीथिकालतामण्डपान्—This compound can be solved in two ways—(i) चन्दन-

वीथिकासु ये लतामण्डपास्तान्. This would be a तत्पुरुष compound 'the bowers of creepers in the avenues of sandal-trees' (ii) चन्दन-वीथिका लतामण्डपाश्च—In this case it is an इतरेतर द्वंद्व compound 'the avenues of sandal-trees and the bowers of creepers'. The hearts tormented with love try to find solace. At such places we prefer the second way of solving the compound.

अथैकस्मिन्.....तमहमद्राक्षम् ।

Kapiñjala continues. Puṇḍarika was found in a thicket completely hypnotised by love. His condition is described graphically to the minutest detail. The canvass is picturesque even with the lighted shades. This long sentence illustrates the peculiarities of Bāṇa's style.

The principal sentence is अथैकस्मिन्सरःसमीपवर्तिनि.....लतागहने कृतावस्थानं.....तं (पुण्डरीकं) अहमद्राक्षम् । कृताव० कृतं अवस्थानं येन "who was posed or who had taken a position'. लतागहने—'thicket of creepers'. All the words in the loc. sing. are in apposition with लतागहने. निरन्तरतया—निविडतया. This thicket was of a very thick growth. This gives the reason for the following idea. The लतागहन was so dense that it appeared to be made up of flowers or full of bees or cuckoos or peacocks. The flowers were abundant; the bees were hovering over them; the cuckoos were enjoying the mango-blossoms and the peacocks were seen delightfully dancing on the trees; the whole scene thus presented a fine appearance (अतिमनोहरे) "एतेन पुष्पाणां बाहुल्यं अतिसुरभित्वं च भ्रमराणां बाहुल्यं, सहकारोद्रेकः अतिरमणीयत्वं च लतागहनस्य सूचितम् ।" वसन्तजन्म० The लतागहन presented an extremely charming appearance. It, therefore, seemed to be the birth-place of the Spring. Spring is attractive; the place where an attractive person is born must also be charming. Hence the delightful grove is called the जन्मभूमि of वसन्त. उत्सृष्टसकल etc.—उत्सृष्टः सकलः व्यापारः येन तस्य भावः 'व्यापारता तया. Thinking of his love Puṇḍarika had given up all occupations. No signs of life could be observed in his case. He, thereupon, appeared as though painted in a picture or carved like a statue or paralysed or fast asleep or engrossed in yogic meditation. इव shows उत्प्रेक्षा here. समाधौ तिष्ठति इति समाधिद्वं. समाधि—derived from सं + आ + धा to concentrate, to fix or to apply intently upon as the eyes, mind etc. means profound or abstract meditation or concentration of the mind on one object. There is in समाधि perfect absorption of the thought into one object of meditation i. e. the supreme spirit. समाधि is the 8th and the last stage in योग, the first seven being यम, नियम, आसन, प्राणायाम, प्रत्याहार, धारणा and ध्यान. योग—has more meanings than one. Here it means ‘contemplation of the supreme spirit,’ which is defined as ‘चित्तवृत्तिनिरोधः’. योग is also the name of one of the six orthodox systems of Philosophy. It was founded by Patañjali and though practically allied with the Samkhya thought, it is reckoned as a separate system. The chief aim of this system is to teach the method by which the human soul may find communion with the supreme spirit and thus secure salvation. Patañjali has framed elaborate rules for the scientific practice of yoga. योगसमाधि—‘The absorption of the soul in ‘profound contemplation’. A person undergoing a yogic trance is dead to all surrounding and is fully absorbed in his thoughts about the supreme spirit. निश्चलमपिचलितम्—with this begins a series of विरोधाभास (for the definition of विरोधाभास see supra). In this and the following five clauses there is contradiction which can be removed by considering the metaphorical sense of चलित, अधिष्ठित etc. One who is निश्चल (steady) cannot be चलित (active) चलित figuratively means ‘fallen’. Puṇḍarīka had certainly fallen from the proper conduct of an ascetic. एकाकिनमपि.....ष्ठितम्—One who is एकाकी (alone) cannot at the same time be attended upon by others. अधिष्ठित—(i) Attended upon and (ii) overpowered. Puṇḍarīka was overpowered by love. अनुराग—(i) passion (ii) redness. One who is red cannot be pale at the same time. Puṇḍarīka was pale because of his love-sickness. शून्यान्तःकरणमपि.....दयितम्—His heart was empty i. e. he looked vacant-minded; yet he had given a place to his beloved in the heart. हृदये निवासिनी दयिता यस्य Mahāśvetā had occupied his heart. Puṇḍarīka’s thoughts being concentrated on her, he looked vacant or absent-minded. तूष्णीकमपि.....शयम्—Here is विरोध inasmuch as a person who is speechless (तूष्णीक) cannot at the same time narrate a tale or some account. Puṇḍarīka was speechless but expressed (mentally of course) the acute pangs of love. कथित—(i) Narrating (ii) expressing. “तूष्णीकं मौनावलम्बिनमपि कथितः निवेदितः मदनवेदनायाः अतिशयः येनेति विरोधः । मौनकथनत्वयोर्विहृदधर्मत्वात् ।” शिलातलो.....व्यवस्थितम्—Puṇḍarīka was seated on a throne: yet he seemed to be at Death’s door. One who is seated on a slab cannot be at some other place at the same time. The contradiction is to be removed by saying that Puṇḍarīka’s condition was such that it might hasten his death or that he was bent upon ending his life, fearing that his मनोरथ might not be fulfilled. व्यवस्थित—P. P. P. from the root, स्था with वि and अव—to ‘decide or determine’. शापप्रदानमयादिव.....संतप्यमानम्—with this clause begins a series of poetical fancies. Puṇḍarīka was being tormented by Love. Madana was burnt to death by Śiva but was revived by Him, at the request of Rati, in a bodiless form. Hence he is called अनङ्ग. Cupid was not seen though he was troubling Puṇḍarīka. The poet fancies that Cupid did not show himself to Puṇḍarīka because he was afraid of the latter pronouncing a curse upon him for so tormenting him. The sage-kind is susceptible to provocation. Cf. “अदूरकोपा हि मुनिजनप्रकृतिः ।” supra. कुसुमायुधः—कुसुमानि आयुधानि यस्य सः—मदन. The God of love is supposed to have flowers as his arrows probably because they are the excitants of love. The five flowers which are supposed to be the arrows of Cupid are differently enumerated. Cf. “अरविन्दमशोकं च च्यूतं च नवमल्लिका । नीलोत्पलं च पञ्चैते पञ्चबाणस्य सायकाः ॥ ; बन्धूकं द्युतिबान्धवोऽयमधरःस्निग्धो मधूकं च्छविर्गण्डश्राण्डं चकास्ति नीलनलिनः श्रीमोचनं लोचनम् । नासाभ्यैति तिलप्रसूनं पदवीं कुन्दा भवन्ति प्रिये प्रायस्स्वन्मुख-सेवया विजयते विश्वं स पुष्पायुधः ॥” Jayadewa’s गीतगोविन्द 10. Sometimes the following are stated as Madana’s arrows—अशोक, केतक, सिन्दुवार, अतिमुक्त and मदयान्तिका. कुसुमबाणाः—इषुः—शरः—अस्त्राः are all synonyms of Madana. अतिनिष्पन्दतया.....शून्यकृतशरीरम्—We have seen above that Puṇḍarīka was quite motionless. A person becomes so when all his sense organs come to a stand-still. Puṇḍarīka (being steady) seemed to be deserted by his sense-organs (शून्यीकृतं शरीरं यस्य). The question naturally arises as to whether his sense-organs had gone leaving him utterly void. The poet imagines three reasons for the disappearance of Puṇḍarīka’s senses. (i) हृदयानिवा.....प्रविष्टैः Mahāśvetā had found a place in the heart of Puṇḍarīka. The senses of Puṇḍarīka were very eager to see his sweetheart dwelling in his heart. They therefore, ran to see her like young lads running to the galleries to see a procession passing along the street. (ii) असह्य.....प्रलीनैः. The senses were dissolved or melted away or had become unconscious (प्रलीन) at the fear of the unbearable heat i. e. Love’s torments. The senses could not bear this and therefore they vanished or fainted away. (iii) मनः.....प्रकुपितैः उन्मुच्य गतैः—They left him being provoked at his agitation. Puṇḍarīka was thinking of Mahāśvetā alone and no sense-organ of his was functioning properly. उन्मुच्य गतैः should better be construed with the last clause मनः...प्रकुपितैः. Due to any one of these three reasons the senses of Puṇḍarīka had deserted him ; निष्पन्द.....मुत्सृजन्तम्—Puṇḍarīka was despondent and was therefore shedding a ceaseless shower of tears with his eyes.

अनवरतं—This may be taken either as an adverb modifying उत्सृजन्तम् or as an adjective qualifying दुर्दिनम्. दुर्दिनम् lit. means rainy or cloudy day or stormy or rainy weather cf. 'उन्नमत्यकालदुर्दिनम्' मृच्छ. V. Here it means 'shower'. All the words in the instrumental sing. are in apposition to ईक्षणयुरालेन. निष्पन्दं यथा स्यात् तथा निमीलितेन; अन्तर्ज्वलन् यः मदनः एव दहनः तस्य धूमेन आकुलितं अभ्यन्तरं यस्य. The eyes were closed; the poet fancies that they were obscured or blinded owing to the smoke of the fire of Love burning or (rather) smouldering within. आकुलिताभ्यन्तरम्—may also mean 'the inside of which was irritated by the smoke etc.' A person rubs his eyes when troubled by smoke. As a result the eyes get irritated. अक्षिपक्ष्मणोः अन्तरे यानि विवराणि तेभ्यः वान्ताः उद्गीर्णाः अनेकधारा यस्मिन्. This qualifies दुर्दिनम्. The shower of the tears was so profuse that streams were emitted through the space between the eye-lashes. आलोहिनीम्.....केसरम् Puṇḍarīka was giving out heavy sighs—a sign of intense grief (which is not given vent to). With these sighs the filaments of the flowers were shaken—so heavy were the sighs. तरलीकृतानि आसन्नलताकुसुमकेसराणि येन (पुण्डरीकेण) तम्; आलोहिनीम्.....आदाय. The sighs rushed out taking with them the reddish lustre (आलोहिनीं ईषत् रक्तम्) of his lower lip-(अधरप्रभा). The अधरप्रभा being red is imagined to be the up-shooting (उर्ध्वसंसर्पिणी) flame of the fire of Love that was consuming his heart. इव shows उत्प्रेक्षा and not उपमा. The adj. उर्ध्वसंसर्पिणीम् is appropriate. The अधर was radiating lustre all round: the flame of fire also rises up, illuminating the space around. वामकरताड.....ललाटमुद्ग्रहन्तम्—Puṇḍarīka had reclined his left cheek against the palm of his hand (वाम-कपोलस्य शयनीकृतं करतलं येन तस्य भावः तथा). Spotless rays were shooting up from the nails of his hand. They brightened his forehead which, then, seemed to have a mark of extremely white sandal-paste. The word देश is joined with स्कन्ध, कपोल, अंस, नितम्ब, ललाट etc. without any change in the meaning. Cf. श्रवणदेशम् in the next clause. अचिरापनीत.....दधानम्—Puṇḍarīka had only recently presented to Mahāśwetā the spray of Pārijāta which had served as his ear-ornament uptil then. The Pārijāta flower was extremely sweet; some of its splendour was still lingering behind although the flower was removed from the ear. Bees were allured by this fragrance. The ear of Puṇḍarīka, therefore, seemed to have a blue lotus or a sprout of Tamāla as its ornament although it was bereft of one. The fancy here rests upon the colour of the bees, the lotus and the Tamāla sprout.

अचिरापनीतः यः पारिजातकुसुमकर्णपूरः यस्य तस्य भावः तथा; सशेषौ परिमलामोदौ हेयोः लोभेन उपसर्पिणा or सशेषः परिमलः तस्य आमोदाः (pleasure) तस्य लोभेन उपसर्पिणा—qualifying मधुकरकुलेन. “विदूरगः सुरभिरामोदो विमर्दोऽथः पुनः सुरभिः परिमलः।” “स आमोदो विदूरगः विमर्दोऽथः परिमलः” इति कोशः। कलविस्त.....जपता—The bees hovering over his ears, were humming sweetly but indistinctly (कलविस्त). The author fancies that the bees were, as if, whispering (into his ears) the charm (मन्त्र) of cupid, that bring on infatuation “संमोहनमन्त्रं वशीकरणमन्त्रम्” is reckoned as one of the five arrows of cupid that infatuate a person: the other four are उन्मादन, शोषण, तापन, and स्तम्भन. Cf. “संमोहनोन्मादनौ च शोषण-स्तापनस्तथा। स्तम्भनश्चेति कामस्य पञ्चबाणाः प्रकीर्तिताः॥” मन्त्र or chants are recited at the time of discharging weapons. Cupid was discharging संमोहनास्त्र at Puṇḍarīka and the humming bees were muttering the संमोहनमन्त्र. उत्कण्ठाज्वर.....बिभ्राणम्—Puṇḍarīka was suffering from fervent love-longing; horriptions appeared on his body as a result of this उत्कण्ठाज्वर. The author imagines that he, under the pretext of these horripilations, as it were carried on his person a mass of broken flowery tips of Cupid's arrows fallen on every pore of his skin. Puṇḍarīka was all agog with love: this was because Cupid had discharged all his flowery at him. The tips of these arrows got stuck into every रोमकूप on his body and these he was carrying. The रोमाञ्चs which were due to the disease of love-longing are fancied as the broken flowery points of cupid's arrows. “कुसुमशरणां यानि शल्यशकलानि ऋतितबाणखण्डानि तेषां निकरमिव” for कुसुमशर see Ante. दक्षिणकरेण च.....धारयन्तम्—Mahāśwetā as we have seen above, instead of returning the अक्षमाला had given her necklace to him (Puṇḍarīka). This necklace he was holding on his chest with his right hand. The necklace flashed forth in the rays shot up from the nails of his hand. The rays with which the necklace was interlaced stand for the रोमाञ्चs arisen due to the pleasure of touch. अविनयपताकाम्—This is a fine retort. The necklace that he held on his chest was the ensign of his rudeness or immodesty. Both the पताका and the एकावली are white. स्फुरित.....राम् is an awkward compound. नखकिरणनिकर-स्फुरिताम् would have been better. कण्टकिताः—कण्टकाः संजाताः अस्याः. Forms like कण्टकित, कुसुमित, तारकित etc. are obtained according to “तदस्य संजातं तारकादिभ्य इतच्” पा० V—ii—36. “तारकाः संजाताः अस्य तार-कितं नभः आकृति गणोऽयम्।”. सि. कौ. IV. “नखकिरणाणां दीर्घतीक्ष्णत्वरूप-कण्टकसाम्यादुत्प्रेक्षते करतलेति।”. मदनवशीकरण.....राहन्यमानम्—The pollen of flowers on the trees hard by was falling incessantly on his body.

This pollen was, as though, the वशीकरणचूर्ण (the subjugating magic powder) of Madana. वशीकरणचूर्ण—a Magic powder by which persons are allured or subdued. Such powders are used even in the present days. आत्मरागमिव.....स्पृश्यमानम्—The shoots of the Asoka trees growing in the vicinity touched him when tossed by the wind. The tender shoots are red. They, as it were, were imparting their redness to Puṇḍarika who was flushed with passion when they touched or caressed him. There is a pun on the word राग. It means 'redness' as well as 'passion'. सुरताभिषेक.....विच्यमानम्—Drops of honey from the bunches of fresh or blooming flowers were falling on his body. It is fancied that the Sylvan Grace incarnate was consecrating him with holy waters for the realm of Love. The showers of honey stand for the holy waters which are used at the time of coronation of a king. Puṇḍarika was reduced to this condition because of love-sickness. Hence the word सुरत is quite appropriate. सुरतलक्ष्णं यद्राज्यं तदर्थं अभिषेकसलिलैरिव. अलिनिवह.....ताड्यमानम्—The Champak trees nearby dropped their buds upon him. The fragrance of these buds was being enjoyed by swarms of bees. The Champak buds are yellow and the bees dark. The former are represented as the तप्तशरशल्कः (red-hot pointed arrows) and the bees as the smoke. Hence the buds along with the bees, as though, appeared to be the smouldering shafts of love, with which Puṇḍarika was being smitten. अतिबल.....निर्भर्त्स्यमानम्—अतिबलः यः वनस्य आमोदः तेन उन्मत्ताः ये मधुकराः तेषां निकरः तस्य झङ्कारलक्षणाः निस्वनाः. The bees were intoxicated (उन्मत्त) with exuberant odour of the wood-land. Perfume, also, excites passion. झङ्कार is an onomatopœic word. 'A low murmuring sound' झङ्कारनिस्वन—'a humming sound' निर्भर्त्स्यमानम् pres. pass. part. from भर्त्स with नि to revile, censure, abuse, chide etc. हुङ्कार—the ejaculation 'Hum' uttered in a menacing tone or in a threat, 'a roar or a grunting sound'. The idea is that the Southerly Breeze was chiding or abusing him with a threatening roar in the form of the humming of the bees. With this low murmur of the bees the अनिल was, as it were, telling him—"Pride brings a person—however great he may be—to perdition or ruination. You, who were too proud of your austerities, have been reduced to this plight. Ha! Ha! One should not, therefore, boast of his powers. Even ascetics have to submit themselves to the emotion of love. Can you now boast of your नियमः, व्रतः etc.". Mr. Kane offers a different explanation for this clause “दक्षिणानिल as if meant to say—Be not idle and sad as you are: when I am here, you need not despair of success”. This explanation is untenable in the light of the word निर्भर्त्स्यमानम् used here. The tone of दक्षिणानिल is one of निर्भर्त्सना and not of one offering help to the needy. दक्षिणानिल alias मलयानिल is supposed to be the excitant of passion and therefore the help-mate or the associate of Madana. Here he rejoices in the power of his friend Madana. The student should note here that the low buzzing of the swarm of bees is represented as the menacing sound of the Southerly Breeze. मदकल.....क्रियमाणं—मदेन कला ये कोकिलाः तेषां कुलं तस्य कोलाहलैः. The month when this incident happened was the मधुमास or the चैत्र. The poet says that Puṇḍarīka was rendered fidgety or restless by the month of Chaitra with the din (कोलाहल) of cuckoos cooing sweetly but indistinctly under the influence of passion. The warblings of cuckoos infatuate a love-sick person. The month of Chaitra, also, is an excitant of passion. In such surroundings Puṇḍarīka had lost control over himself and had therefore become perplexed or restless. वसन्त.....कलकलैरिव—The कोलाहल is represented as the clamour of victorious cries (जय, जीव महाराज etc.) uttered in honour of the spring. वसन्त is compared to a king. People utter cries of victory to greet their king. वसन्त was welcomed with the din of the hosts of cuckoos which stand for the minstrels singing the praises of kings. प्रभातचन्द्रमिव.....परिगृहीतम् with this begins a series of उपमाs. Owing to love-longing Puṇḍarīka was all pale. He is, therefore, compared to प्रभातचन्द्र (moon at dawn) which is also pale since her light fades away. पाण्डुतया परिगृहीत lit. means, ‘seized or grasped by pallor:’ hence ‘clothed in pallor’. निदाघ.....मागतम्—The fervent love-longing had emaciated him: he was again pale (white). He, therefore, looked like the white निदाघगङ्गाप्रवाह (the stream of the Ganges in summer) which can be said to be ऋषिमानमागतम् inasmuch as it subsides (dries up) in summer. ऋषिमानम्—Acc. sing. of ऋषिमन्. Forms like ऋषिमन्, प्रथिमन्, पिङ्गलमन्, नीलिमन्, जडिमन्, पिञ्जरिमन् etc. are obtained with the addition of the affix इमन् to हृश, पृथु etc. according to “पृथ्वादिभ्य इमनिच्वा” अन्तर्गतानलं.....म्लायन्तम्—under the influence of passion he was fading away. He, therefore, appeared like the sandal creeper which also withers away with the fire inside. अन्तर्गतानलम्—is applicable to Puṇḍarīka as well as to चन्दनविटप. Puṇḍarīka was internally consumed by the fire of love. म्लायन्तम् Acc. sing. of the pres. part. म्लै to fade, wither, be down-cast or dispirited. अन्यमिव.....परिणतम्—

The condition which he was suffering from had changed him so much that even to Kapīñjala—his dearest friend—he appeared to be a stranger or one unseen or unacquainted or one undergone transmigration or one metamorphosed. आविष्टमिव.....ग्रहगृहीतमिव—आविष्ट, महाभूताधिष्ठित or ग्रहगृहीत practically mean the same thing. He was still and steady. He appeared to be possessed by a ghost or a devil or an evil spirit. आविष्ट P. P. from विश् with आ “entered or possessed by an evil spirit”. उन्मत्तमिव.....मूकमिव—उन्मत्त ‘mentally deranged’. We cannot translate उन्मत्त by ‘delirious’ for Puṇḍarīka was silent. Cf. अतिनिष्पन्दतया etc. Supra. He cannot be said to be delirious for a delirious person talks too much. उन्मत्त also means “Insane, frantic, mad”. A lunatic often sits silent or motionless. छलित—cheated, deceived. विलासमयमिव मदनमयमिव—absorbed in dalliance or amorous sports or sunk in love. परायत्तचित्तवृत्तिः.....मन्मथावेशस्य—परायत्ता चित्तवृत्तिः यस्य. His disposition was not controlled by himself but by someone else i.e. by Love and hence he appeared to have reached the climax of the influence of love. The student should note the idiomatic expression परां कोटिं अधिरूढम् cf. अतिभूमिं गतः below P. L. अनभिज्ञेयपूर्वाकारम्—अनभिज्ञेयः पूर्वाकारः यस्य. The cumulative effect of all this strange condition brought on him by love was that his original form was difficult to recognise.

The whole paragraph sets a fine word-picture of a person oppressed by unreciprocated love. The reader can recall to his mind the exact condition of Puṇḍarīka. The picture is no doubt exaggerated and overdrawn but exaggeration or hyperbole is the soul of Bāṇa's style.

अपगतनिमेषेण.....मनसावधार्याब्रुवम् ।

Marking him in that condition Kapīñjala was filled with apprehension. He reflected on the power of Cupid: he approached and asked Puṇḍarīka what it was and what it all meant. Puṇḍarīka retorts him and trying to defend his conduct offers no convincing explanation for his strange condition. Convinced of the seriousness of the case, Kapīñjala resolves to exhort him.

अपगतनिमेषेण—अपगतः निमेषः यस्य—qualifies चक्षुषा; तदवस्थं—सा अवस्था यस्य तं. Supply पुण्डरीकम्, समुपजातः विषादः यस्य. Kapīñjala observed Puṇḍarīka in that condition for a long time: he was aghast and dejected. He reflects on the cause of all this. अतिशयेन दुर्विषहो दुस्सहो वेगः यस्य—qualifies मकरकेतुः (मकरः केतुः यस्य—स मदनः). The power of Madana is irresistible since even ascetics cannot withstand it. येनार्य.....मुपनीतः. This assigns the cause for the power of Cupid is irresistible. अवस्थान्तरम्—अन्या अवस्था—अवस्थान्तरम्. अप्रतीकारम् may be taken as an adverb modifying उपनीतः or an adjective qualifying अवस्थान्तरम्—against which there is no remedy. The अवस्थान्तर to which Puṇḍarīka was reduced by Madana was absolutely irremediable or incurable. नाम is a particle used in more senses than one. Here it means 'Indeed, forsooth, verily'. It is often used with the interrogative pronouns and its derivatives, कथं, कदा etc. in the sense of 'possibly, indeed'. For its other senses Cf. "हिमालयो नाम (named) नगाधिराजः" कुमा. I—i; "अये पदशब्द इव श्रूयते मा नाम (probably) रक्षिणः" मृच्छ. III; it is often used with अपि in the sense of 'I wish, would that' "अपि नाम एवं भवेत्"; परिश्रमं नाम (pretence or pretended action); when नाम is used with the infinitive it means 'Granted, though, it may be, well'—"अतनुषु विभवेषु ज्ञातयः सन्तु नाम"; "ममापि नाम (shows anger or censure) रक्षिणः । मृच्छ० III or 'ममापि नाम दशाननस्य परैः परिभवः"; "आश्चर्यमन्धो नाम (shows wonder) पुत्रं द्रक्ष्यति ।". ज्ञानराशिः—Treasure-house of knowledge. This evidently refers to Puṇḍarīka. This and the following clause show Kapīñjala's astonishment at the sudden change that had come over Puṇḍarīka. Enlightened persons have no consideration for worldly affairs. They detest them but Puṇḍarīka, learned though he was, had yielded to the persuasion of Love. This is what has astonished Kapīñjala. एकपदे—all of a sudden. व्यर्थं भवेत्—become null and void. तथा... जडीकृतः—This brings out the contrast between the former behaviour of Puṇḍarīka and his present action. Puṇḍarīka right up from his childhood gave promises of being an ideal person: (he had already fulfilled those expectations): he was regarded as a model to be emulated by the other ascetic youths (स्पृहणीयं चरितं यस्य). But now, to what a miserable state Love has brought him! Love has disregarded his knowledge, slighted his austerities, and destroyed his profundity (गाम्भीर्यं). जडीकृतः—stupefied or paralysed. What difference is there between Puṇḍarīka—once an ideal to be copied by others—and an ordinary mortal who succumbs to the overtures of Passion. आशेषवात्—The preposition आ in the sense of 'till, as far as and from' governs the ablative. Cf. "आ परितोषाद्विदुषाम्" शाङ्ग. I; आ मूलाच्छ्रोतुमिच्छामि" शा. I; "आ कैलासात्" मेघ. 11. Besides these senses आ is also used in the sense of ईषत्—a little, somewhat. Cf. ‘आमत्तानां कोकिलानां कूजितैः’ आमत्तानां = ईषन् मत्तानाम्. Sometimes आ is joined to nouns to form अव्ययीभाव compounds. “आमेखलं संचरतां घनानाम्”. सर्वथा.....अस्वलितम्—अस्खलितं—न विद्यते स्खलितं यस्मिन्—‘in which there are no mistakes or slips’. Youth free from slips is seldom to be met with. This observation is true for all times. Youth is bound to commit mistakes. We learn by our failures. Failure is no crime. The author might have written this in self-defence. अंसावसक्तपाणिः—अंसे (पुण्डरीकस्य) अवसक्तः स्थापितः पाणिः येन; शिलातलैक—Kapīñjala took his seat on a part of the very slab on which Puṇḍarīka was sitting. These actions of Kapīñjala are dramatic and show great intimacy. अनुन्मीलितलोचनम्—न उन्मीलिते लोचने येन तम्—refers to पुण्डरीक. Kapīñjala addressed him who had not as yet opened his eyes. अथ सुचिर.....अवदत्—The main sentence is अथ.....चक्षुरुन्मील्य.....दृष्ट्या विलोक्य मां..... निश्चस्य.....शनैः शनैरवदत्. The subject of अवदत् is सः (पुण्डरीकः) which is to be supplied. कथमपि प्रयत्नेन is to be connected with चक्षुरुन्मील्य. सुचिर.....लग्नमिव, उत्कुपितमिव, सवेदनमिव. These state the reasons why he opened his eyes with great effort and difficulty. सुचिरं चिरकालं यस्मिंलनं तेन लग्नमिव. The eyes were, as though, stuck fast being closed for a long time. उत्कुपितमिव—as though irritated. सवेदनमिव as if full of pain. This was of course due to constant weeping. The reading उत्कम्पितमिव would give the sense ‘as though trembling, quivering or shaking.’ उत्कुपितमिव is to be preferred to उत्कम्पितमिव. समुपजातः अरुणभावः यस्य. The cause of this was अनवरतरोदन. Puṇḍarīka was constantly weeping: hence his eyes had become red. अश्रुजल—अश्रुजलस्य पटलं तस्य पूरः तेन प्लावितम्—wetted or overflowing with tears. स्वच्छा—स्वच्छं यत् अंशुकं तेन अन्तरितं यत् कमलवनं तस्य छाया कान्तिः इव कान्तिः यस्य—This fancy is based upon both अनवरत.....भावम्...and अश्रु.....प्लावितम्. The red eyes are represented as the bed of red lotuses and the flow of tears stands for a ‘white silken garment’ (स्वच्छांशुक). The red eyes overflowing with tears had, therefore, the hue of a bed of red lotuses screened with a white silken garment. चक्षुः stands for both the eyes of Puṇḍarīka for it cannot be said that Puṇḍarīka opened only one eye while the other remained closed. Few persons are capable of performing such a feat. Puṇḍarīka surely cannot be included among these very few. मन्थरया दृष्ट्या—‘with a languid or dull gaze’. The gaze was languid on account of the influence of passion. माम् is the object of विलोक्य. आयततरं निश्चस्य—sighed heavily or heaved a long sigh—a sign of intense grief. लज्जा—लज्जया विशीर्यमाणानि अक्षराणि यथा स्युः तथा—This is an अव्ययीभाव compound and modifies अवदत्—Puṇḍarīka was put out with shame. He could not, therefore, proceed straightway but faltered as he spoke. विशीर्यमाणानि—From शृ with वि—to be split up in pieces, be shattered or (scattered). तदवस्थया—तस्य (पुण्डरीकस्य) अवस्थया. अप्रति०—न विद्यते प्रतिकारः यस्य स. अप्रतिकारः । अप्रतिकारः विकारः—His malady (विकारः) was beyond any remedy i.e. it was absolutely irremediable. तथापि...निवारणीय—Kaṣiṇjāla knew that the विकार of Puṇḍarīka was incurable: Yet, he, as a friend, must exert his utmost to dissuade him from following an unrighteous path. Cf. with this “प्राणपरित्यागेनापि रक्षणीयाः सुहृदसवः” इति कथयामि above. A true friend advises justly. यावच्छक्तिः and सर्वात्मना are to be connected with निवारणीयः ‘with all one’s soul and might.’

सखे पुण्डरीक.....तूष्णीमभवत् ।

Another fine example of the forceful style of Bāṇa. Kaṣiṇjāla waxes eloquent when he admonishes Puṇḍarīka first with taunts but at a later stage with sympathetic words. Puṇḍarīka helplessly explains his condition and implores his friend to save him.

केवलमिदमेव.....नियमप्रकारः—Note the severe tone of Kaṣiṇjāla and the retorts that he hurls at the door of Puṇḍarīka. धर्माज्ञो— a means to acquire merit. He asks Puṇḍarīka whether all this was undertaken by him to secure merit, thinking that penance only was not enough for धर्माज्ञं. व्रतरहस्यम्—व्रतस्य रहस्यम्—the secret of a vow, unknown to other ascetics. The रहस्य of a vow is not to be exposed: otherwise its efficacy would be lost. नियमप्रकारः—religious observance नियम is any voluntary or self-imposed observance. It, also, means any minor or lesser vow or a duty prescribed to be done but which is not as obligatory as a यम. Cf. “शौचमिज्या तपो दानं स्वाध्यायोपस्थाननिग्रहः । व्रतमौनोपवासं च स्नानं च नियमा दश ॥” In योग philosophy नियम is the 2nd of the 8 steps of meditation. For the other stages cf. note on समाधि above. In मीमांसा, नियम has altogether a different sense. There, it means a rule laying down something which in the absence of that rule, would be optional ‘विधिरत्यन्तमप्राप्तौ नियमः पाक्षिके सति ।’ अप्रबुद्ध इव.....बुध्यसे—अप्रबुद्ध इव—like an unenlightened person. Kaṣiṇjāla means to say, “Persons who are अप्रबुद्ध do not realise that they are made a butt of ridicule by others and that others enjoy at their costs. “But you, my dear friend, are प्रबुद्ध (enlightened): you know the proper course: you can discriminate the right from the wrong. Why don't you, then, realise that the miscreant of Cupid has made you a laughing stock". हतक ("हत इव नष्टप्रायस्वात् कन्"), दग्ध, हत etc. are prefixed or affixed to words and are regarded as terms of 'abuse', Cf. "न खलु विदितास्ते तत्र निवसन्तश्चाणक्यहतकेन" मुद्रा० II; "नाद्यापि मे दग्धदेहः पतति" उत्तर० IV; "अस्य दग्धोदरस्यार्थे कः कुर्यात् पातकं महत्" हितो० I-68.

मूढो.....आयास्यते—Every young man should note this observation. Bearing this in mind, he should not allow himself to be tormented by Madana lest he would pass as a fool in society. It seems to be rather strange that such a remark should come from Bāṇa who led a licentious life in his youth. Probably after all the bitter experience he had, he counsels his brethren not to allow Love to prey upon them. Example is better than precept. का वा..... भवतः—Kaṭiṇjala thinks that Puṇḍarīka might have fallen in love thinking that he would reap happiness thereby. This argument of his dispels that vain hope of his friend. What hope of pleasures can there be in the sensual objects which are condemned by the good but highly prized by low or mean persons. स खलु.....मारोपयति—Mark the force of the sentence. The construction is यः मूढः अनिष्टानुबन्धिषु विषयोपभोगेषु सुखबुद्धिमारोपयति स धर्मबुद्ध्या विषयतावनं सिञ्चति.....The illustrations adduced in this passage not only show the impossibility of happiness from the enjoyment of sensual pleasures that are followed by a series of calamities but point out that indulgence in the विषय is bound to lead a person to woe and misery as the sprinkling with water of a poisonous creeper or touching the blade of a sword etc. would do. धर्मबुद्ध्या—with the idea of acquiring merit. Watering trees, plants etc. conduces to one's merit but watering a poisonous plant with the notion of acquiring merit is a foolish deed for nursing such a creeper would result in the death of many a man. निक्षिंशलता—निक्षिंश lit. means 'more than thirty'. The word has come to mean a sword because the normal length of a sword is more than thirty अङ्गुलः. लता—This brings out the thinness (or sharpness) of the sword. कुवलयमाला—a string of blue lotuses (dark like the sword). कृष्णागुरु—The line of smoke of black aloe is also dark like a deadly serpent (कृष्णसर्प). दुष्टः वारणः तस्य दन्तः मुसलः इव तम्—the pestle-like tusk of a mad or infuriated elephant. The tusk looks like a lotus fibre because both are white. "अनिष्टानां दुःखानां अनुबन्धः परम्परा अस्ति एषां ते अनिष्टानुबन्धिनः (विषयोपभोगाः)". For a more or less similar idea cf. the following—ग्याल बालमुणालतन्तुभिरसौ रोद्धुं समुज्जम्भते । छेत्तुं वज्रमणीम्

शिरीषकुसुमप्रान्तेन सन्नद्धते । माधुर्यं मधुबिन्दुना रचयितुं क्षाराभ्रुषेरीहते । नेतुं वाञ्छति यः खलान् पथि सतां सूक्तैः सुधास्यन्दिभिः ॥ सुभाषित ॥ अभिगत.....क्षुभितं मनः—Since Puṇḍarīka could not control his turbulent mind and check his excited senses, Kaṣṭhijala asks him to shake off his knowledge. The knowledge of a person is निवारक i. e. it wards off all evil things but now it has become निवार्य i. e. it itself is to be warded off. Thus, it has become impotent like the futile light of a fire-fly. The light of a fire-fly is useless since it is overpowered by that of the Sun. It is better to take ज्योतिः—and निवार्यम् as two separate words than to take ज्योतिर्निवार्यम् as one word as the commentator understands—“ज्योतिः तत्त्वज्ञानं प्रकाशश्च तेन निवार्यं दूरीकरणार्हम्” । The reading निर्वार्यम् adopted by Mr. Kale is certainly a better one than निवार्यम् but if the evidence of the Mss. has supported it, Dr. Peterson would not have failed to adopt so good a reading. निवार्यम् is to be connected with ज्योतिः as well as with ज्ञानम्. The इन्द्रियस्य are compared to streams because both are प्रबल.....तानि and उन्मार्गप्रस्थितानि. प्रबलस्य रजसः पापकर्मणः रजोगुणस्य प्रसरः तेन कलुषितानि (इन्द्रियाणि); प्रबलस्य रजसः धूलेः प्रसरः तेन... (स्रोतांसि) The senses get excited owing to the prevalence of violent passion while the streams are rendered turbid by a thick mass of dust. रजस (with इन्द्रियस्य) may also mean the रजोगुण. The प्रकृति of the सांख्यस्य is made of three गुणस (hence it is called त्रिगुणात्मिका)—सत्त्व, रजस and तमस्. In the state of equipoise the proportion of these three गुणस is clearly balanced but when it is disturbed प्रकृति gives rise to various things in the world. The preponderance of one or the other of the three गुणस is at the basis of multiplicity of emotions and dispositions in the universe. उन्मार्ग—taking to waywardness (with इन्द्रियस्य); flowing outside the course (with स्रोतांसि). अभिगतं विषयाणां स्वरूपं येन (स्वया पुण्डरीकेण). कोऽयम्—After all who is this Cupid ! Kaṣṭhijala, hereby shows how insignificant an object that Love is ! दुराचारः (दुष्टः आचारः) may refer to the misbehaviour of Puṇḍarīka or to Madana condemned in the preceding sentence. The latter alternative is certainly to be preferred. दुष्टः आचारः यस्य—the depraved or the vile one, वचनमाक्षिप्य—Puṇḍarīka was beyond all words of advice. He stopped Kaṣṭhijala in the midst of his discourse. प्रतिपक्षमान्तरालं.....णिकं प्रमृज्य—प्रति प्रत्येकं यत् पक्षमणः अन्तरालं तत्र प्रवृत्ताः बाष्पाणां वेणिकाः धाराः यस्मिन्—qualifying चक्षुः which is the object of प्रमृज्य. He wiped of from his eyes the flow of tears that had started through every interval between the eye-lashes. Puṇḍarīka felt very sorry to hear the words of his friend and also at his inability to carry out his wholesome advice. He wept bitterly and a stream of tears was flowing from his eyes. वेणि or वेणिका means 'a continuous flow, current or stream' Cf. जल-वेणिरम्यां रेवां यदि प्रेक्षितुमस्ति कामः' रघु० VI-43. Also मेघ० 20. करतलेन मामवलम्ब्य—Puṇḍarika was unable to support himself: he, therefore, reclined on the hand of Kaṣiṇjala. सर्वथा स्वस्थोसि.....न गोचरे—Puṇḍarika defends himself. He points out to Kaṣiṇjala that he is quite at ease since he has not so far been struck by Cupid's shafts. Once he comes within the range of those deadly arrows, he would cease advising others or exhorting persons in the manner in which he had rebuked him (i.e. Puṇḍarika). आशीः—This states the reason for Kaṣiṇjala's being स्वस्थ. Note the study of the human mind here. It is love that disturbs the equilibrium of a person's mind. A person undergoes a great change once he falls in love. आशीःसु दंष्ट्रासु विषं यस्य स आशीविषः सर्पः तस्य विषस्य वेगाः तद्वत् विषमाणां—qualifies सायकानाम् । Deadly like the impulses (वेग) of the poison of a snake. गोचर । province, range. सुखमुप...परस्य It is easy to offer counsel to others. Persons in this world are in the habit of tendering advice to others but when they suffer from a similar emotion, their lips become sealed. They, then, eat up what they had said to others. This, also, shows an admirable study of human psychology on the part of the author. यस्य चेन्द्रियाणि.....मर्हति—Puṇḍarika says that he has been reduced to such a state that words of advice would be wasted on him. Who after all deserves to be advised—one who is on his senses or who has a mind free to think or who can see or listen or understand what others speak to him or who is able to distinguish between the good and the evil. As for himself, he was beyond all this. Why should his friend, then, waste his energy in trying to persuade him? His efforts are certainly mis-directed. अलम् ind. when used with the infinitive means 'able or competent' "वरेण शमितं लोकानलं दग्धुं हि तत्तपः" कुमा. II. 56. It is used in various other senses (i) Enough, sufficient (either with dat. or inf.) "कथपि खलु पापानामलमश्रेयसे यतः" शिशु II-40 "तस्यालमेष्टा शुभितस्य गृह्यै" रघु II-49 (ii) A match for; equal to—महो महाबालम् (iii) It has also a prohibitive force and means 'no need of, away with' "अलमन्यथा गृह्यत्वा" "अलं महीपाल तव भ्रमेण" रघु II-34. (iv) completely, thoroughly "अहस्येन क्षमयितुमलं वारिधारासहस्रैः" मेघ० 53. अवष्टम्भो.....कथा—"अवष्टम्भः चित्तवृत्तिनिरोधः—self-control. प्रतिसंख्यानम-

ध्यात्मज्ञानम्—reflection. अस्तं गता एषा कथा—all talk about these virtues must vanish so far as I am concerned. These are the virtues which every ascetic tries to cultivate. But Puṇḍarīka says that he is no longer an ascetic and hence Kaṣṭhijala should not talk about them. अयत्नविधृताः अयत्नेन अप्रयत्नेन विधृताः—Puṇḍarīka was anxious to die and so he did not make any effort to hold his life but the life itself somehow effortlessly hangs on. दुरातीत.....समयः Note the synonyms for अतीत and काल. प्रतिसंख्यानवेला—The opportunity for reflection has slipped away. केन वान्येन.....करणीयम्—Puṇḍarīka admits his helplessness and looks to Kaṣṭhijala for guidance. Who but Kaṣṭhijala would advise him in that juncture or who but he would divert him from following a wrong course. On whose words but those of his friend should Puṇḍarīka rely and who else but Kaṣṭhijala is a friend to him in the whole world. There is nobody in the whole world who would fill up the place of Kaṣṭhijala. Puṇḍarīka does not blame his friend for rebuking him so severely. It was natural that he should have been excited at his strange condition. But things had gone beyond his control and he, therefore, desires that his friend should find a way out. As for himself, he cannot retrace his steps. दुष्टावस्था—दुष्टा दुःखदायिनी अवस्था—wretched state. यावत्प्राणिमि—This is an s.o.s. or an ultimatum to Kaṣṭhijala. Instead of wasting his words in useless advice Kaṣṭhijala should exert himself to administer some treatment against the fire of love with which his friend was burning. कल्पान्ते उदिताः ये द्वादश दिनकराः तेषां किरणानां आतपः तद्वत् तीव्रस्य—The fire of his love was as scorching as the rays of the twelve suns that arise at the periodical Dissolution. For कल्प see note on युग ante. For the various portents that appear at the time of the world-Dissolution, see note on प्रलयकाल supra. प्रतिक्रिया—remedy, treatment. यावत्प्राणिमि—as long as I breathe i.e. before I die. This is significant for it's no use bringing the horse after the fair. For the construction in यावत्...तावत् see note ante. पच्यन्त.....शरीरम्—This gives an idea of his मदनसंताप. उत्कथ्यते—fr. कथ् with उद् 'to boil.' फुल्यते fr. फुल् to scorch, to burn.

Kaṣṭhijala's expostulations fell flat on Puṇḍarīka : he resolved to save his life at least and starts nursing the love-sick Puṇḍarīka, adopting the conventional procedure. His reflections this time centre on the exploits of the powerful Cupid but he checks himself merging into useless thoughts. Convinced that the union of Puṇḍarīka with Mahāśwetā was the 'only solution to make his friend happy, he thinks of how to bring it about. Puṇḍarīka wouldn't propose himself nor would he consciously allow Kapīñjala to move in the matter. Hence without the knowledge of his friend he had come to Mahāśwetā. He brought his account to a close with earnest appeal to her to do the needful.

एवमुक्तोप्यहं.....पुनः पुनः—Puṇḍarīka defended his conduct as best as he could. Yet Kapīñjala was not satisfied with his explanation. He did not give up his duty as a friend and tried to dissuade his friend from following the wrong course of and on. प्राबोधयम्—Imp. 1st pers. sing. of the caus. of प्र + बुध् to awaken, to rouse. यद्वा पुनः.....कर्ण—Kapīñjala recounted in clear, coaxing and entreating terms the precepts of the scriptures, giving illustrations and quoting historical episodes of persons who mastered similar emotions and thus saved themselves but Puṇḍarīka turned a deaf ear to all his words. The words in the instr. plural qualify वचोभिः; शास्त्रोः—शास्त्राणां उपदेशः तेन विशदः clear because of the precepts or teachings of the scriptures शास्त्रम्—शास्त्र्यते अनेन इति शास्त्रम्—A religious or a sacred treatise or scripture. The word शास्त्र is often affixed to words denoting the subject e. g. वेदान्तशास्त्र, अलंकारशास्त्र, न्यायशास्त्र, etc. सनिदर्शनैः—निदर्शनैः सहिताभिः (वचोभिः) निदर्शन—example, illustration, instance. It appears that Kapīñjala cited instances similar to Puṇḍarīka. सेतिहासैः—इतिहासः (इति ह आस) पुरावृत्तं तेन सहितैः. He also quoted historical episodes. साधुनयं and सोपग्रहम् modify अभिधीयमानः (Pres. pass. part. from धा with अभि). साधुनयम्—अनुनयेन सहितं यथा स्यात्तथा—entreatingly, or prostrating before him. “प्रणतिः प्रणिपतेऽनुनये” इति अमरः। सोपग्रहम्—उपग्रहेण सहितं यस्मिन् कर्मणि यथा स्यात्तथा—complacently or coaxingly. नाकरोत्कर्णे—Note the idiom. “Did not lend his ear (to me) or did not pay attention (to me)”. अतिभूमिं.....निवर्तयितुम्—‘He has reached his climax: he cannot be forced to retrace his steps’ अतिभूमिं गम्—या to go to excess “अतिभूमिं तस्या अभिनिवेशो गमिष्यति” माल. 11; “अतिभूमिं गतोऽनुरागः”; “तत्र सर्वलोकास्त्य अतिभूमिं गतः प्रवादः”. The word अतिभूमि is used in the sense of ‘excess or climax’ by the author at another place also “सर्वोत्सवानामतिभूमिमिवाधिनयानः” below. Cf. “परां कोटिं गतः” above. कृतमतिरुथाय... ..शयनमस्याकल्पयम्—Served with an ultimatum that he was, Kapīñjala makes up his mind to save the life of his friend at least and begins administering the treatment that is often ministered to love-sick persons. He collected lotuses, their fibres and leaves as well and prepared for him a bed to allay his burning fever. सरसः abl. sing. of सरस—This refers to the lake अच्छोद. सरसाः—qualifies मृणालिकाः; रसेन सहिताः सरसाः—Juicy or succulent. मृणालिकाः is the object of समुद्धृत्य (ger. from सं + उद् + हृ)—having plucked. जललव—जललवेन लाभितानि—furnished with drops of water. The object of आदाय is पलाशानि. गर्भधूलि—गर्भे धूलिः परागः तस्य यः कषायः (sweet, astringent) परिमलः तेन मनोहराणि—qualifies कमलानि. कुमुद red lotuses. कुवलय blue lotuses and कमल—white lilies. लतागृह—we have seen above that Puṇḍarika was sitting on a slab of stone embowered by creepers. 'लतागृहने कृतावस्थानम्; शिलातलैकपार्श्वे समुपविश्य' above. अकल्पयम् Imperf. 1st person sing. of the caus. of कृप् to arrange or prepare. सुखनिषण्णस्य—सुखेन निषण्णस्य (पुण्डरीकस्य)—when he had stretched himself at ease on the bed of lotuses. चन्दनविटपादीनाम्—of sandal and other trees. The reading चन्दनविटपादीनां is better than चन्दनविटपादीनाम् for it is the tender shoots of sandal-trees that are used in such cases. किसलयानि is the object of निष्पीड्य (ger. fr. निस् + पीड् to squeeze or to press) "लभेत सिकतासु तैलमपि यत्नतः पीडयन्" स्वभावसुरभिणा—inherently or naturally sweet. This and the following expression in the instr. sing. qualify रसेन. ललाटिका—a mark on the forehead made with any fragrant or cool powder. 'ललाटिका भूसरालका' कुमार V. 55. भस्मललाटिका. ललाटिका, also means an 'ornament worn on the forehead' तुषारशिशिरेण—तुषारवत् हिमवत् शिशिरेण 'cool like snow'. आचरणतलात्—for this construction see note on आ ante. च + अरचयम्. अङ्गवर्चा—rubbing and besmearing the body with cosmetics or fragrant substances. Cf. अङ्गक्रिया । अभ्यर्णपाद०—अभ्यर्णः आसन्नः यः पादपः (कर्पूरपादपः) तस्य प्रस्फुटितानि यानि वल्कलानि तेषां विचराणि तेभ्यः शीर्णानि—qualifies कर्पूररेणुना (camphor-dust). The camphor-dust had fallen in pieces through the interstices of the cracked barks of a neighbouring (camphor) tree. The commentator takes पादप as referring to trees in general. This is evidently not intended. करसंचूर्णितेन—Kapīñjala powdered the small pieces of the dust with his hands and stopped the perspiration of Puṇḍarika by applying the powder to his body. स्वेद—one of the eight सात्त्विकभावः (or external indication of internal feeling or emotion). सात्त्विकभाव is one of the divisions of भावः in poetry. For the eight सात्त्विकभावः, cf. "स्तम्भः स्वेदोऽथ रोमाञ्चः स्वरभङ्गोऽथ वेपथुः । वैवर्ण्यमश्रुप्रलय इत्यष्टौ सात्त्विकाः स्मृताः ॥". The स्थायिभाव is a fixed or permanent condition of the mind. These feelings give rise to the different रसः—each रस having its own स्थायिभाव. The स्थायिभावाः are eight or nine “रतिर्हासश्च शोकश्च क्रोधोत्साहौ भयं तथा । जुगुप्सा विस्मयश्चेत्यमष्टौ प्रोक्तः शमोऽपि च ॥” सा. दर्पण. व्यभिचारिभाव opposed to स्थायिभाव is a transitory feeling. The व्यभिचारिभावाः which are 33 or 34 in number, are not necessarily the substratum of the रसः but they feed the prevailing sentiment, strengthening it in various ways. For the enumeration of the व्यभिचारिभावाः cf. काव्य. IV—31–34 and रसगङ्गाधर I. उरोनिहितः.....न्वतिष्ठम्—उरसि निहितं चन्दनद्रवेण आर्द्रं वल्कलं यस्य—This refers to Puṇḍarīka. Kapīñjala had laid on his chest a bark-garment wet with sandal-juice. व्यजनक्रियाम्—the act of fanning “व्यजनं तालवृन्तं तत्” अमरः. Kapīñjala fanned him with a plantain-leaf (कदलीदल) that was shedding sprays of transparent water. स्वच्छाः सलिलसीकरः तेषां निकरः तं स्त्राविणा तेन (कदलीदलेन) । The student should note that all these clauses refer to the conventional treatment meted out to souls suffering from unrequited or unreciprocated love. The modern treatment to such suffering hearts is far too different from the classical one referred to here. एवं च मुहुर्मुहुः.....Kapīñjala was busy in administering this treatment to Puṇḍarīka. उपकल्पयतः, आरचयतः, कुर्वतः and वीजयतः qualify मे. अन्यः.....नमुपकल्पयतः—Kapīñjala had to arrange his friend's bed with fresh lotus-leaves now and then as the old ones became hot as soon as they were placed underneath Puṇḍarīka's body owing to the burning sensation that he then experienced. As Kapīñjala was engrossed in this, he could not but reflect on the power of cupid. नास्ति.....मनोभुवः—मनोभूः—The mind-born i. e. the God of Love. He is so called because love is the function of the mind. Nothing is difficult in this world for cupid to achieve. The word भगवन् is rather ill-placed in the mouth of Kapīñjala for only a few lines above he had condemned him as दुराचारः. Probably Kapīñjala's attitude of looking at things is now changed. He is now facing facts squarely. On the previous occasion his mind was too much ruffled and he looked at things through coloured glasses. कायं हरिण इव.....महाभेता. This illustrates his preceding proposition. Cupid has succeeded in bringing together two persons that would never have otherwise crossed each other's path—Puṇḍarīka innocent by nature and contented in his dwelling in the forest and Mahāśvetā a Gandharva-princess of bewitching charms. चनवासनिरत, स्वभावमुग्ध on the one hand and विविधविलासरसराशि, गन्धर्वराजपुत्री on the other show how utterly impossible it is for such two persons to meet but cupid brought them together and hence there is nothing that is दुर्घट, दुष्कर, अनायत्त and अकर्तव्य for

Love. For the construction in क.....क see note Supra. दुस्सपादेव..... विचरति—Not only that he attempts दुष्कर things but insolently does he move towards things quite inaccessible to him. प्रतिकूलयितुम्—to defy. का वा गणना.....रोचते—It's no wonder that he unites sentient beings when he is capable of uniting even inanimate things if it would please him. Note the use of अलम्, रुप् and other roots having the same signification govern the dative of the person pleased. Cf. 'यत्प्रभविष्णवे रोचते' "यज्ञदत्ताय स्वदत्तेऽप्युः" The following clauses illustrate the proposition advanced in का वा गणना etc. कुमुदिन्यपि.....भवति—This and the following sentences are rather baffling. The commentator explains them as follows—"दिवसकरस्य सूर्यस्य कराः किरणाः । तत्कार्यकारित्वाद्दिनकरत्वं चन्द्रस्य । तस्मिन् अनुरागो विद्यते यस्याः एवंविधा (कुमुदिनी) भवति । तदुक्तं—चन्द्रश्चण्डकरायते मलयजो लेपः स्फुलिङ्गायते मात्स्यं सूचिकारायते मृदुगतिर्वातोऽपि वज्रायते ।" शशिकरकार्यकारित्वात्सूर्यकिरणानां शशिकरत्वम् । तेषु यो द्वेषः तमुज्जति (कमलिनी)" It will be seen that the commentator interpretes दिनकर as चन्द्र and शशिकर as सूर्य. Thus, according to him the clauses mean, "the कुमुदिनी (the moon-lotus) entertains love for the rays of the moon; while the कमलिनी (the day-lotus) gives up her hatred for the sun." This interpretation is untenable in view of the context in which they occur. We have remarked above that the following sentences illustrate the proposition का वा गणना.....रोचते. Hence they must be so interpreted as to bring out the power of cupid in uniting two inanimate objects quite unsuited to each other. This is best instanced in निशा & वासर; जोत्स्ना and अन्धकार; छाया & प्रदीप; तडिद् and जलद; जरा and यौवन. The same train of thought runs through कुमुदिनी...भवति and कमलिनी.....उज्जति. This, we hope, can be brought by explaining the clauses as follows—कुमुदिन्यपि.....भवति—(i) दिनकरस्य सूर्यस्य किरणैः अनुरागिणी भवति—The किरण here referred to are evidently the किरण of the setting Sun. It is these किरण that bring the union of the कुमुदिनी and her lord viz., the Moon closer. The कुमुदिनी is flushed with passion (for the Moon) with the rays of the (setting) sun. Hence indirectly she can be said to be entertaining a soft corner for the दिनकरकिरण (ii) दिनकरस्य किरणान् अनु पश्चात् रागिणी भवति—This is the 1st interpretation offered by Mr. Kane "loves the rays of the sun i.e. becomes full of affection (for the moon) after the rays of the Sun i.e. after the Sun has set". This is more or less similar to (i). In his second interpretation Mr. Kane explains दिनकरकिरण as the moon not on the analogy of the commentator but by advancing a different reasoning altogether "दिनकरस्य किरणः यस्मिन् स चद्रः". But this interpretation is open to the same fault as that of the commentator. शशिकरः.....मुञ्जाति शशिनः कराः तेभ्यः यः द्वेषः तम्—'gives up her hatred for the rays of the moon' The rays mentioned here are the rays of the moon at dawn. It is at dawn that the day-lotus begins to bloom (poetically smile) though the rays of the moon touch her petals; hence poetically the कमलिनी can be described as giving up her hatred for the moon. This is evidently under the influence of the love for the कमलिनी is filled with longing for the Sun—her Lord. The influence of love is so powerful that even the कमलिनी gives up her natural hatred for the moon and begins to laugh, thus preparing to receive her lord. Mr. Kane, after giving the literal meaning of the sentence, explains the underlying idea thus. "The कमलिनी gives up him who hates the rays of the Moon i.e. darkness—शशिकरेषु द्वेषः यस्य स अन्धकारः तं त्यजति. 'The कमलिनी does not laugh at night and closes its petals when the sun sets'. But under this explanation we would rather expect शशिकरद्वेषम् and द्वेषम्. In connection with these two sentences we cannot help remarking that Bāṇa is not speaking of any strange natural phenomenon but alludes to the aspect of the night and day-lotuses blooming at the rise of the Moon and the Sun respectively. He has, however, cleverly worded the sentences. The pun rests on the arrangement of the words and not exactly on the sense they convey. The words and not the sense alone bring out the power of Cupid in mating two inanimate objects intrinsically opposed to each other. निशापि.....मिश्रतामेति—The night mixes with the day. The night follows the day. The cycle goes on endlessly. The simple physical phenomenon of the night following the day is looked upon as a union of the two brought about by love. The night and the day are opposed to each other by their very nature and yet they are united. So vigorous is the power of Love. The commentator explains this on the same plea of कार्यकारिण्य—“निशापि रात्रिरपि दिवसकार्यकारिणाद्वासरेण मिश्रतामैक्यतामेति । यथा—' चित्रन्यस्तादपि विषधराज्ञीतिभाजो निशायां किं तद्भूमस्त्वदभिसरणे साहसं नाथ तस्याः' इति ” ज्योत्स्नापि.....वर्तते—Moon-light adapts herself to darkness. The moon shines at night. ज्योत्स्ना and अन्धकार are poetically said to be wedded together. छायापि.....तिष्ठते—The shade faces the light. Where there is light, there is shade below. This invariable association of the two is here represented as a union due to love. Light and shade are opposed to each other. तद्विदपि.....मेति—Lightning forgets fickleness in the company of the cloud. जलद (a cloud) is here said to be the lover of तद्विद् which is fickle by nature. Lightning is potentially present in the cloud. Thus it is said to be standing firm by the cloud. जरापि.....भवति old age moves on with youth. This can be explained in three ways—(i) Youth is followed by old age. This physiological phenomenon is spoken of as the old age waiting upon youth due to the power of love. (ii) A man becomes all grey and emaciated when once he has come under the sway of love. (iii) Even an old woman (जरा वार्धक्ययुक्ता नारी) is enamoured of a young man. This is not unusual because the power of love is irresistible. The word यौवन is rather objectionable. वासर, अन्धकार प्रदीप and जलद are all words in the masculine gender but यौवन is not. To remove this objection we have to take यौवन as an adjective standing for यौवनयुक्तेन पुरुषेण. Note that in all these sentences the words are happily chosen. किं वा तस्य..... मुपनीतः—Kapīñjala says, “what of other things! why should I refer to them to show the power of Love to achieve impossible things! The case of my friend—this Puṇḍarīka—alone illustrates the proposition. When Love has successfully contrived to reduce this vast ocean of tranquillity (viz. Puṇḍarīka) to such an insignificant state that of a fickle blade of grass, what is left for him as difficult to achieve? Who, possibly, had thought that such a serene person as Puṇḍarīka would come under the sway of Love! But this has been a fait accompli. Hence my salutations to that Great Madana! निष्पत्तीकारम्—having no remedy. आपद—the calamity that had befallen Puṇḍarīka. किमिदानींसमाश्वासनेनायं जीवेत्—Things had gone beyond his control. The only thing left for him to do is to find out the means to save the life of his friend. This passage shows his anxiety to find one. संकल्पाः—thoughts. किमनया.....चिन्तया—Kapīñjala realises that no useful purpose would be served by indulging in unprofitable thoughts. Facta non verba—“Deeds not words” is the motto that he should follow now. Otherwise there would ensue a dire calamity. प्राणा... ..रक्षणीयाः—he must save his life by any means fair or foul. Note that he—an ascetic has no scruples in adopting even unfair means for saving the life of his friend. What a power the bond of friendship holds over men's minds! तेषां.....संरक्षणोपायः—तेषाम् refers to प्राणानाम्. तत्समागम—तस्याः समागमः—Union with her i.e. Mahāśwetā. This was the only means to save his life. त्वत्समागमे—is not a good reading because Mahāśwetā is recounting the direct words of Kapīñjala. बालभावाद.....मनोरथम्—This shows why he should act himself and not wait for Puṇḍarīka to move in the matter. Construe—बालभावाद् अप्रगल्भतया च मदनव्यतिकरं तपोविरुद्धं अनुचितं आत्मनः

उपहासं इव मन्यमानः अयं (पुण्डरीकः) एकोच्छ्वासवशेषजीवितोऽपि तस्याः स्वयमभिगमनेन मनोरथं न पूरयति । Puṇḍarīka is yet a boy and hence अप्रगल्भ (shy, timid): he looks upon his love-affair as तपोविरुद्ध (antagonistic to his austerities), अनुचित (improper or unworthy of himself) or उपहास (a mockery). It is then certain that he would not himself propose to the Gandharva-princess and thus fulfil his cherished desire. The parties affected by love never move of themselves: it is their friends that have to take the initiative. बालभाव...गल्भतया may also be construed with स्वयमभि.....पूरयति but this would involve the fault of दूरान्वय. एकोच्छ्वास—एकः उच्छ्वासः अवशिष्टः. यस्मिन् एतादृशं जीवितं यस्य एवंभूतः अपि—though his life remains by one breath only i. e. though he may be on his death-bed. अकाल—न कालान्तरं क्षमते यः इति अकालान्तर-क्षमः—admitting of no delay. Kapīñjala cannot wait until somebody else acts in the matter or till Mahāśwetā comes there of herself. सततम्.....साधवः—The good opine that a friend's life must, in all cases, be saved by committing even a base deed (अकृत्य) howsoever censurable it may be (अतिगर्हितेनापि). Cf. this with similar observations supra. अतिहेपण—extremely ignominious. अकर्तव्य—base or ignoble. अवश्यकर्तव्यता—obligatory or imperative. This refers to his going to Mahāśwetā and informing her of the wretched condition of Puṇḍarīka—an ascetic. अस्याः = महाश्वेतायाः. कदाचि.....हम्. Having resolved to approach Mahāśwetā, Kapīñjala slipped from that place under some excuse (सव्याजम्) without even informing Puṇḍarīka as he apprehended that he, i. e. Puṇḍarīka would ward him off from following this wrong course. अनुचितः व्यापारः तस्मिन् प्रवृत्तः तं मां (कपिञ्जलम्) object of. विज्ञाय—Knowing that I was out for an unseemly act. संजाता लज्जा यस्य—qualifies पुण्डरीक. Being overcome with shame. तदेवमवस्थिते...भवन्ती—Concluding his account, Kapīñjala requests Mahāśwetā to do the needful under the circumstances. ईदृशस्य अनुरागस्य सहशम्—what is in keeping with this sort of love (of Puṇḍarīka). अस्मदागमनस्य चानुरूपम्—what is in conformity with my visit here. Great persons always refer to themselves in the plural. “वयं तत्त्वान्वेषान्मधुकर हतास्त्वं खलु कृती” मन्मुखासक्तदृष्टिः—मन्मुखे आसक्ता दृष्टिः यस्य स कपिञ्जलः—किमियं वक्ष्यति—expecting as to what Mahāśwetā would reply.

Mahāśwetā is filled with ecstasy to hear from Kapīñjala that Puṇḍarīka is tormented by love, and so she begins to pay compliments to Cupid. Yet, rather shy, she does not know what to reply. Just then, the Queen's arrival is announced. Kapīñjala, fighting shy of the crowd, slips from the place, imploring her once more to save the life of Puṇḍarīka. The queen-mother comes in state, stays there for some time and departs. Mahāśwetā, however, being absent-minded, is unconscious of all that.

The main sentence is अहं तत्क्षणं अचिन्तयम्. The sub-clauses express how Mahāśwetā responded to Kapīñjala's speech. सुखामृतमये..... निमग्ना—हृद् a lake; निमग्ना P. P. P. fr. नि + मज्ज—qualifying अहम्. A person merging in a lake is filled with water, which in this case is ambrosial bliss; she has heard from Kapīñjala that Puṇḍarīka has deeply fallen in love, which fact fills her with joy. This is expressed in this and the next four phrases which are rather synonymous. रति.....अवतीर्णा. रतिरस—sexual pleasure. अवतीर्ण P. P. P. of अवन्तु to descend, to enter. मय is a suffix used to indicate 'made of,' 'composed of,' or 'full of'. अधिरूढा P. P. P. of अधिरूढ I P. रूढ becomes transitive when preceded by certain prepositions. उत्सव a festive occasion, when the mind is full of joy. अतिभूमिः highest pitch, अधिशयाना pre. part. of अधि + शी II A—to lie down. The root is intransitive yet like स्था and अस् becomes transitive when preceded by अधि, and governs the acc. according to अधिशोऽस्थासां कर्म. (पाणिनी I. 4. 46) तत्काल...बाष्पजलबिन्दुभिः स्रवद्भिः आवेद्यमानहर्षप्रसंगा...आवेद्यमानः (pre. pass. part. of आविद् causal, to narrate) हर्षप्रसंगः यया (मया) qualifies अहं subject of अचिन्तयम्—who by tears communicated that it was an occasion of ecstasy for me. All the phrases in instrumental plural qualify बिन्दुभिः तत्कालोप.....कपोलोदरैः, तस्मिन् काले (कपिजलकथितस्य मदनपीडितपुंडरीकस्य वृत्तान्तश्रवणेन) उपजाता या लज्जा (abashment) तया. महाभेतायाः मुखं किंचिदवनतं अधोमुखं आसीत् तस्मात् कारणात्. Her face was drooping a little as a result of abashment that arose in her that very moment. So the tears flowing from the eyes, which in their natural course flow along the cheeks and over the dimples (कपोलोदर), now slipped over them—lit. did not touch them. उपर्युपरि.....दक्षितमालाक्रमैः—the tear-drops fell in so close a succession (अनुबंध) by falling over and over that they showed as if a garland was strung of them. मालायाः इव क्रमः—a manner of proceeding as if in a garland. अप्राप्त.....भरैः—संश्लेष contact. प्रथिमन्—magnitude from पृथु big, derived like क्रथिमन् (see क्रथिमन् page 31). भर heavy. The tears were gushing forth through the eyes; but the eyes were open, and hence these did not come in contact with the eyelashes; ordinarily when one weeps the eyes are half-closed and the tears touch the eyelashes, break and fall so they are small. But the case being otherwise here, they are big and heavy. दिष्ट्या तावत्..... बभ्राति. This is how she views the situation. दिष्ट्या is a particle expressive of joy or gladness and may be translated as 'I am glad,' 'happily,' 'thank God,' etc. Cf. दिष्ट्या प्रतिहतं दुर्जातम् (Mal. 4). (vide Apte's guide § 280). अनंगः an epithet of cupid signifying that he has no corporeal form as the result of the fire from Śiva's eye. Cf. App. IV. मामिव like me; as he has followed me. यत्सत्यं..... अनुकूलता एतेन मदनेन मे—towards me, to be construed with दर्शिता. अंशेन slightly, to some extent, यत्सत्यं regarded as one word, is used in the sense of 'to be sure,' 'to own' 'to speak the truth.' She meant that it was here that Madana was tormenting her, yet even in doing so he had expressed that he was favourable to her; संतापयता Instr. sing. of the pre. part. of the causal of सं+तप् to torment. Another explanation can also be offered: supply पुंडरीकम् as the object of संतापयता. In tormenting Puṇḍarīka Cupid has shown to me his (Puṇḍarīka's) favourableness to me. She means that no doubt that Cupid tormented Puṇḍarīka. But what was the subject of his love that he should be so love-sick? Of course she herself. She was herself love-sick for him but by this time had not known to what extent her love was reciprocated. Here was an indication. यदि च..... अनेन.—तस्य पुंडरीकस्य. किमिव 'possibly,' 'Indeed,' 'I should like to know'; इव is added to the interrogative pronoun and its derivatives in these senses (Cf. Apte's Guide § 257). अनेनोपकृतम् he has obliged me. किं..... नोपपादितम्—supply मम. उपपादितम् P. P. of the causal fr. उप+पद् to bring about or to accomplish. को वा... समानो बन्धुः—बन्धुः बभ्राति मनः स्नेहादिना—a relative or a friend whose business is to help. Cupid has favoured her by giving her heart's desire e.g. Puṇḍarīka's love. What relative could have equalled Cupid by helping her to that extent? कथं वा... निष्कामति. Bāṇa makes references to this fact many times that the appearance gives glimpses of the character. Cf. बालिके कल्याणिनि तव अविसंवादिनी अचपला बालभावेऽपि आकृतिरियम्। p. 26. प्रायेण च एवंविधाः दिव्याः स्वप्नेऽपि अविसंवादिन्यो भवन्त्याकृतयः। The belief that 'face is an index to the character' has been subscribed to by Kalidasa also. Cf. 'न तादृशा आकृतिविशेषा गुणविरोधिभ्यो भवन्ति'। शाकुन्तलम्. IV. प्रतिपत्तव्यम् Pot. Pass. Part. from प्रति + पद् 4 A. to undertake. She is rather confused; she is glad, no doubt, but what response could she give? The nature of the dilemma she was now facing is made clear by her on page 37. But she required time for that and Kapīñjala was waiting for a reply. In order to relieve them both out of this awkward situation Bāṇa brings the queen-mother on the scene. एवं विचारयन्त्या एव (मम). A genitive absolute construction. This expresses, like the Loc. Absolute the sense of 'when' 'while' and not its usual special meaning contempt, and disregard. एव used with the participle as in this case gives the sense, 'as soon as' 'no sooner than,' 'scarcely when,' 'The moment that'. (Apte's guide § 124). ससंभ्रमा—संभ्रमेण सहिता full of hurry, hurriedly. संभ्रम hurry, confusion. माम् अकथयत्. कथ् governs the dative of the person but the acc. (as used here) and the gen. too are not rare. इति used in the sense of 'that'. In this sense this particle requires at least a subject and a verb in the sentence quoted. So the complete sentence is त्वं अस्वस्थशरीराऽसि इति. न स्वस्मिन् स्थितम् (at ease or normal) शरीरं यस्याः सा त्वम्. उपलभ्य—loving learnt. This shows the cause why the queen came there. It was possible that by that time some of the servants might have conveyed the news that Mahāśwetā was 'not well' तच्च श्रुत्वा—कपिञ्जलःइत्यभिधाय..... द्वारदेशे कथमप्यवासनिर्गमः प्रययौ । is the main sentence महान् जनानां संमर्दः (crowd) तस्मात् भीरुः (shy)—this gives the cause why Kapīñjala hurried. In the ordinary course he could have waited longer for the reply, giving her full time to weigh the pros and cons. But she must now pay attention to the queen—her mother and as such would take a long time—महान् अयं उपस्थितः कालातिपातः—a cause for long delay. The apparent excuse he puts before her is about the sunset. अस्तमुपगच्छति दिवसकरः भुवनत्रयचूडामणिः—the crest jewel of the three worlds, an adjective of दिवसकर. For at that time he had to offer his evening adoration सायंसंध्या. He might also have suggested that the approach of sunset is followed by moonrise—an occasion that excites and aggravates the passion of the love-sick people. Even while going he implored her once more very earnestly, which is beautifully expressed in his modest request सर्वथा.....विभव । अभिमतस्य (dear) सुहृदः प्राणाः तेषां रक्षा (protection) एव दक्षिणा (a present or a gift to Brahmins) तदर्थम् । एषः अंजलिः उपस्थितः— here I fold my hands. Mark this use of एतद् (cf. Apte's guide § 131) प्रतीहारी seems to be a constant attendant on the queen, following her everywhere. We have met her before with the queen when the latter had been for the bath. कुसुमानि flowers ; पटवास or पटवासकं perfumed powder. अंगरागः (scented cosmetics or unguents, probably like the modern snow and toilet powder). We have taken this compound as समाहार for it includes similar other things such as sandal-paste, collyrium and so on. Some of the servants carried these while the hands of some others were busy waving the chowries. After these followed in train the किरात and others. कुब्ज—a hump-backed person. किरात—a mountain dweller barbarian. वामन—a dwarf. But Apte gives कुब्ज-किरात वामन—as equivalent to a hump-backed person and a dwarf. बधिर—deaf. कलमूक—a dumb and deaf. कलमूकः वाचा श्रवणेन्द्रियेण च हीनः, कलमूकस्त्ववाक्च्युतिः इति वैजयन्ती quoted by दर्पण. These persons are referred to as assigned to the harem (cf. page 74 Kādambārī). For “प्रनृतकलमूक कुब्जकिरातवामनबधिरजड-जनपुरःसरेण”. Calcutta editions read विकलमूक, विकल meaning ‘maimed.’ Prof. Kane prefers it as yielding good sense. But comparing with the passage quoted above we can hardly justify it. कथमपि somehow, with great difficulty. This brings out the force of the words, सर्वतः संरुद्धे द्वारदेशे. एष मे परमो विभवः—This is all in all of my property; this is all I have. प्रतिवचनकालम्—the time for reply. अप्रतीक्ष्य—न प्रतीक्ष्य gerund from प्रति+ईक्ष् I A. to expect. सर्वतः संरुद्धे द्वारदेशे—through the door that was blockaded (संरुद्ध) on all sides (सर्वतः) by attendants. All the phrases ending in instr. singular qualify परिजनेन पुरोयायिना—पुरः अग्रे याति—तेन. प्रतीहारी a female door-keeper derived from प्रति (ती) हारः a door, a gate. जन a group of people. The door was blockaded by प्रतीहारीजन, कंचुकिलोक, and परिजन. We have got three adjectives. परिजन—attendants, followers, servants taken collectively; especially the retinue, or the train of female attendants, the maids. The position of the adjectives is rather not clear. कनकवेत्र.....etc. qualifies प्रतीहारीजन. There is no adj. preceding कंचुकिलोके while गृहीततांबूल....., चामर....., कुब्जकिरा.....गतेन come before परिजनेन. So we have to take these last three with परिजनेन. As a matter of fact even the कंचुकिन्ऽ and प्रतिहारीऽ are included in परिजन. ताम्बूलं कुसुमानि पटवासः अंगारागश्च तेषां समाहारः । ताम्बूल is the leaf of the piper betel, rolled together with the arecanut, catechu, chunam and spices and is usually chewed after meals. Carrying a betel-box was the special privilege of a servant of rank, generally a female and designated as ताम्बूलकरंकाहिनी. The servant's report of the queen's visit in state, her stay there and departure have been cut short in one sentence as it is not likely to develop any effect. अयासीत् is the Aor. III sing. of या to go; mark the words सुचिरं स्थित्वा. She stayed there for a long time; yet Mahāśwetā was unable to take cognizance of her for she was absent-minded (ज्ञानं हृदयं यस्याः सा). Page 36. L. 18—P. 37. L. 13

गतायां च तस्यां.....वासवी दिगयासीत् ।

With the sunset and the subsequent fall of darkness, Mahāśwetā becomes much more restless and seeks advice from Taralikā as to what course she should follow. She puts before her the consequences of either of the alternatives viz., to accept Kaṣṭhijala's request and incur demerit or court death and disappoint Kaṣṭhijala and perhaps cause the death of Puṇḍarika which is all the more sinful. Just then the dusk sets in.

In this and the next four paragraphs, from अस्तमुपगते..... जीवलोकै, आसन्नचन्द्रोदय.....दिगयासीत्, ततः शशिकेसरि—अनीयत यामिनी, तं प्रत्यासन्न.....उदितं विलोक्य, नातिदूरोद्वेतेन.....प्रदोषसमये, Bāṇa describes very minutely the successive minute changes, changing shades of the evening, starting with the sunset and ending with the advent of प्रदोषसमय the first watch of night. Such descriptions are not rare with Bāṇa. Cf. the sunset and the subsequent fall of darkness (page 136), the morning (page 25). Yet each of these descriptions has peculiarities of its own. In the present series the exciting character of the night-fall aggravating the condition of the love-sick persons has been beautifully portrayed.

गतायां च तस्याम्—अम्बायां a locative absolute construction showing the contemporaneity of the main action. अहं तरलिकां अपृच्छम्. अस्तमुपगते.....सवितरि. हारीता इव हरिता वजिनः यस्य (whose horses are green like the हारीतस—pigeons) going with सवितरि. सवित् an epithet of the sun, derived from the root सू to impel. The sun impels the beings to work and hence his name. He is सरोजिनीजीवितेश्वर—the lord of the existence of the day-lotus-plants (सरोजिनी). The day-lotuses bloom with the sunrise and fade with the sunset and hence the sun is poetically fancied to be the lord of their very existence. Again. चक्रवाकसुहृद् means well disposed to the चक्रवाक birds. During the day the चक्रवाक birds are united and with the sunset they separate. लोहितायमाने loc. sing. of the denominative from लोहित red. आशामुख—the horizon. हरितायमानेषु (rendered green), नीलायमानेषु (blue,) are similarly formed. Mark the contrast and colour-harmony. तिमिरेण अवष्टम्भमाने जीवलोकै—when this mortal world was enveloped in darkness. पातालपङ्ककलुषेण पातालेषु पङ्कः तद्वत् कलुषेण (dark) तिमिरेण. महाप्रलय.....पूरेण is to be construed with तिमिरेण or अवष्टम्भमाने. In the first case it means that the darkness (after the sunset) was as dark as the inundating floods at the great Deluge, which does not give a good sense for those floods we cannot take as dark. In the latter case the comparison is sought between the action of अवष्टम्भ and प्लावन of the पयःपूर. Still darker Bāṇa refers to पाताल as the region of darkness on page 43. पातालतलमिवावतीर्णा etc. किर्तयतामूढा—perplexed, at a loss to know what to do, at wits end,—qualifying अहम्. तामेव—the same Taralikā; she means that Taralikā who so far had helped her. इदम् adv. greatly. आकुलम् perturbed. न प्रतिपत्तिः (the knowledge of the course of action) अत एव विह्वलानि आकुल and विह्वल are rather synonymous; she means that her heart is confounded so she cannot think and her limbs are perplexed and so cannot move for they do not know what to do. अलम् to be able, in the sense it is used with an infinitive or the dative (Apte's guide § 67 A) अणु अपि even a little, qualifies कर्तव्यम् अप्रतीतिव्याकुलानि V. L. com. explains सर्वस्मिन् विषये अरुचिः अनिश्चयः वा not having definite knowledge (of the course of action) and hence perturbed. सांप्रतम् fit, proper, suited to the occasion (derived) from संप्रति now, at the present moment संप्रति योग्यम्. अयम् has the same sense as 'here' in English. अयं कपिञ्जलः गतः—here has Kapīñjala left (just now). त्वत्समक्षमेव—just in your presence; she means that all the facts are before her (Taralikā) and she has known all the antecedents. She will be able to guide her. Mahāśweṭā is unable to decide for she is confounded. तावत् first of all, before anything else. इतरकन्यकाः इव—like other ordinary women born in low family. She is born of a high family. The main sentence is यदि तावद् इतरं इव स्वयमुपगम्य.....अधर्मो महान्। उपगम्य—having approached. पाणिं ग्राहयामि—get myself married to him. रागांधवृत्तिः—blinded by passion (रागेण अन्धा वृत्तिः यस्याः). अधर्मः—an unjust act, a sin. गुरुजनातिक्रमं—trespass against the elders. The common characteristic of the simile is given by a series—लज्जामुत्सृज्या.—अंगीकृत्यायशः अननुज्ञाता.....मात्रा. Bṛṇa's style has this peculiarity that similes are quite elaborate. This series of gerundial phrases brings out the different aspect of the simile. We had an example of this type discussed in the रशनेपमा—क्रमेण च मे वपुषि.....page 14. The contrast between महाभेता who is high-born and इतरकन्यकाः who are not so born is brought out by these phrases. विहाय लज्जाम्—abandoning all sense of shame; उत्सृज्य धैर्यम्—giving up firmness of mind which is required to control oneself in the hour of test or infatuation; अवमुच्य विनयम्—discarding modesty; अचिन्तयित्वा जनापवादम्—regardless of public censure; अतिक्रम्य सदाचारम्—transgressing the rules of good conduct. उलूच्य शीलम्—violating (my) good character; अवगणय्य (gerund fr. अव+गण् causal) कुलम्—slighting the family; अननुज्ञाता not permitted. For a similar idea see page 233 K. कथमिव मादृशी.....etc. अथ 'if,' 'supposing that,' 'in case' (cf. अथ कौतुकं आवेदयामि page 21.). धर्मानुरोधात्—धर्मस्य अनुरोधात्—Through consideration for धर्मः; the first alternative resulted in अधर्म

that was to be thus discarded. इतरपक्षावलंबनद्वारेण—by way of resorting to the other alternative ; प्रथमम् firstly. तावत् before anything else, on the face of it. स्वयमागतस्य—who voluntarily came here. प्रथमः प्रणयः याच्ना (request) अस्य अस्तीति प्रथम०. प्रणयप्रसरभंगः—प्रणयस्य (a request) प्रसरः (expression) तस्य भङ्गः (violation). Kapñijala had come to her voluntarily and had preferred this as his request to her. पुनर् अपरम् moreover, secondly. प्राणविपत्तिः—destruction of life, accident to the life. आश्नाभङ्गात्—the ablative shows cause of the action. तद् then, the correlative of यदि. मुनिजनस्य वधः तेन जनितं—arising out of the murder of a sage i.e. Puṇḍarīka. एनः sin. Kapñijala had described Puṇḍarīka's agony as अकालान्तरक्षम and finally when he left he had begged the life of his friend. Hence it was clear that if she did not go, there was the possibility of this danger. Taralikā was faced with the choice between the two evils. In order to give her breathing time the poet now directs his attention to the phenomenon of the night-fall and the moonrise. इत्येवं.....एव मयि—even as I was saying thus. आसन्नः चन्द्रस्य उदयः तस्मात् जन्म यस्य सः तेन—qualifying आलोकेन (by the light, glimmer) विरलादपि विरलेन—lit. fainter than the faint one; very faint. वासवी दिग्—the quarter presided over by वासव, (Indra) i.e. the East. The east, south, west and north are supposed to be guided by Indra, Yama, Varuṇa and Kubera respectively. धूसरतां अयासीत् attained a dusky colour. वसन्ततौ वनराजिः इव—like the sylvan grace in spring. कुसुमेषु रजः (pollen) तेन. This is the common characteristic of the simile. गुरुजनातिक्रम is expressed in approaching of herself without the permission of the father or the consent of the mother. In following this course she would first have to discard shame (an ornament of womanhood); secondly firmness (which meant a confession of fickleness not appropriate to education); modesty (a characteristic virtue of maidenhood); righteous conduct (an essential attribute of the culture she was born of); character (that every human being has to respect); in doing so public opinion might be offended—that one must care; the honour of the family might be shaken—that one must avoid; all this means infamy in this world and grave sin in the other world. This act she feels not in conformity with the womanhood, unsuited to her education, unbecoming of her maidenhood, antagonistic to her culture, detrimental to her self-respect, unworthy of her high family; this is what Bāṇa suggests in this series. He brings out elaborately the full significance of the contrast between the high-born Mahāśwetā and other ordinary girls that easily fall a prey to passion. But with all this we shall find that Mahāśwetā had to take up this alternative; so irresistible is the sway of the god of love, who flouted all her considerations for this and that thing by the creation of the exciting atmosphere to depict which Bāṇa has taken great care as will be seen later.

P. 37 .LL. 14-23.

ततः शशिकेसरि.....अनीयत यामिनी ।

In slow degrees the east becomes brighter and brighter; the horizon is illumined by the light that heralded the rising moon; there-after the Lunar orb gradually shoots up and an exciting charm is imparted to the night by the moon.

ततः पाण्डुतामापाद्यमानं पश्चिमेतरत् इन्दुधाम्ना दिगन्तरम् अदृश्यत is the main clause. पश्चिमेतरत् (n.) nom. sing. of पश्चिमेतर (पश्चिमस्याः इतरत् other than the west i.e. the east); this qualifies दिगन्तरम्. इन्दोः चन्द्रस्य धाम्ना (by the rays or light). पाण्डुतां आपाद्यमानम्—being rendered white. This is a predicative adjective not necessarily to be construed with the main clause. It is correlative with धवलीक्रियमाणम् and पाण्डुरी-क्रियमाणम्. Though these adjectives are synonymous as धवल, पाण्डुर and पाण्डु are synonyms these have to be differentiated as धवल fair, of a pale white colour, पाण्डुर whitish and पाण्डु completely white. Mark the gradual change. The author fancies that this colour—change is worked out through various agencies. The first is शशिकेसरि... संभवेन...क्षोदेन. शशी एव केसरी तस्य कराः (rays or paws) तैः विदार्यमाणाः तमः एव करी तस्य कुंभाः तत्र संभवः यस्य सः By the powder (क्षोद) of pearls found in the temples in the form of darkness (तमः एव करी) when these temples were broken by the lion in the form of the moon. The idea is that moon dispels darkness. The darkness is fancied to be the elephant (which is dark because of its dark skin). One who kills these elephants is the lion, which in this case comes to be the moon (not a very poetic idea). The moon destroys darkness with his rays (कर) as the lion with his paws. Poets imagine that pearls are found in various places. बराह in his बृहत्संहिता remarks द्विपभुजगशुक्तिशंखाभ्रवेणु तिमिरसूकरप्रसूतानि मुक्ताफलानि तेषां बहु साधु च शुक्तिर्जं भवन्ति । Accordingly the pearls in the temples of these elephants are strewn in the broken form by the stroke of the lion's paw. (Can we imagine this मुक्ताफलक्षोद as the stars strewn in the sky when darkness sets in?); उदयगिरि.....क्रियमाणम्. The second fancy is that the east was, as if,

rendered whitish by the mass (राशि) of the sandal-powder dropped from the bosoms of the Siddha damsels dwelling on the Eastern mountain. Siddhas are demi-gods— who dwell on the उदयगिरि, the mountain where all the luminaries of the firmament rise. Sandal-paste is applied by women to their breasts to soothe the heat of passion. This paste gets dried and falls as powder which is white and hence the fancy. चलितजलधि.....सिकतोद्गमेन पाण्डुतामापाद्यमानम्—चलितं (agitated) जलधिजलं तस्मिन् ये कल्लोलाः (waves) तदुपरि वा तज्जनितेन अनिलेन उल्लासितः (upraised) यः वेलायां (on the shore) पुलिनेषु सिकतानां उद्गमः तेन. The sandy shower of the sea is white and when it is heaved up by the breezes on the waves of the agitated sea, the sands are blown away making everything white wherever they fall. Here it is fancied that they were, as though, fallen on the eastern horizon. शनैः शनैः.....अकरोत् निष्पतन्ती जोत्स्ना the moonlight that was (coming up), which was, as though, the radiance of the teeth of night. When one is delighted at the sight of somebody, the face begins to bloom with a smile which is rendered more charming by the radiating lustre of the teeth. The night here is giving out slight smile and so the simile. मुखशोभां अकरोत्—decorated the face. निष्पतन्ती nom. sing. of the present part. feminine from निस् + पत् going with both ज्योत्स्ना and दशनप्रभा. तदनु thereafter; अनु—after, like some other prepositions as उप, अधि, can be used by itself and then it governs same case (here acc.). This is an example of कर्मप्रवचनीय (Apte's guide § 37). रजनीकरबिम्बेनाराजत रजनी mark the alliteration. शेषफणामण्डलेन इव—like the rounded hoods (फणः or फणा) of शेष. शेष is white, a standard of whiteness. रसातलात्.....उद्गच्छता qualifies both शेष and रजनिकर अवनीं अवदार्य (having broken through) gerund from अवह causal. रसातल a region of the nether world where शेष resides. It is below the earth. So शेष if he wants to come up has to break through and shoot up (उद्गच्छता). So did the orb of the moon (which too is round) when it rose up the Rising Mountain. क्रमेण च आरोहता शशिना रमणीयतामनीयत यामिनी.....यामिनी the night (from याम a division of three hours. The night is often spoken as त्रियामा). Gradually the night became charming by the ascending moon. शशिना is the agent of अनीयत. As the moon ascended the sky the night began to be more and more delightful, as by the gradually advancing youth (क्रमेण आरोहता यौवनेन इव). All the adjectives of the moon are equally applicable to यौवन. अमृतमयेन सुधास्यन्दित्वात् अमृतपूर्णत्वं इन्द्रोः । सुधासेवनोपमसुखसंवाधत्वात् यौवनमपि अमृतमयम् स सकलजीवलोकं आनन्दयति तेन यौवनैः शशिना च. कामिनीजनानां (कामिनी—a passionate lady) बल्लभः (dear); किञ्चित् उन्मुक्तः बालभावः येन—that has slightly discarded childhood (applicable to youth); who had passed beyond the early phases, (at the time of the rise i. e. who has slightly left off the paleness, at the time of the rise). The moon is both pale and red at the rise. If we take the early phase as the redness then the description of redness of the moon (in this sentence समुपारूढरागः) would be difficult to account for. This is the only plausible explanation—‘चन्द्रमसि उदयावस्था’ बाल्यं ‘पुनरन्यत्र शैशवम्’ ‘बालभावः उदयावस्था’; मकर^० who (by his exciting influence) is, as though, a brother to the god of love (applicable to the moon); that (because of excited passion) considers the god of love as the near kinsman (youth). समुपारूढरागेण—which was now reddened; that is now full of passion. समुपारूढः रागः यस्मिन् सुरतोत्सवोपभोगैकयोग्यं that (moon) can best be enjoyed at the time of dalliance; (youth) that alone is best enjoyable in sexual pleasures. Bāṇa suggests that the beauty of the moon can best be enjoyed at this time only while the sexual pleasures yield highest pleasure at this period only. Think of the age of Mahāśwetā who had just entered the youth and not completely given up childhood, and Puṇḍarikā of the same age and how the moon influenced them both.

अथ तं.....उपक्षिप्तं दैवेन इति ।

With the sight of the flushed moon, all factors causing excitement of passion Mahāśwetā is vexed more and ultimately faints. Taralikā promptly nurses her with the treatment prescribed for a love-sick person. Mahāśwetā soon regains consciousness; Taralikā advises her to strike one of the two courses,—either to send for him or going herself to him, but not to rot there. Mahāśwetā cannot hold out; apprehensive of death, she decides to start while she is alive. As she proceeds her right eye throbs—an indication of ill-omen for women.

At the bottom of the sea, the moon lay along with the thirteen renowned jewels, where perhaps it had attained this redness in the company of the corals. Here the moon is shown to have arisen on the उदयगिरि and hence the adjective प्रत्यासन्न cannot be taken with समुद्र; solve the compound as प्रत्यासन्नाः समुद्रविद्रुमाः तेषां प्रभा तया पाटलितः इव.

The next fancy is that the moon was rendered blood-red (शोणीकृत) by the (stains of) blood (शोणित) of his own fawn (हरिण) that was mauled (आहत) by the lion on the Rising Mountain with its paws. In order to rise above the top of the mountain the moon had, as though, to creep along the slopes. While he was doing so some lion or lions (which are supposed to be haunting the forests of the mountain) spied the deer on him and struck it with its paw. So the stains of the blood oozing therefrom had rendered his body blood-red. The spots on the lunar disc are fancifully represented as the deer whence its epithet मृगाङ्क; other explanations of the spot are referred to in the verse,—‘अङ्कं केऽपि शशङ्किरे जलनिधेः पङ्कं परे मेनिरे सारङ्गं कतिचिच्च संजगदिरे भूच्छायमैच्छन् परे । इन्द्रोर्यद्वलितेन्द्रनीलशकलश्यामं दरीदृश्यते, तस्मान्दं निशि पीतमन्धतमसं कुक्षिस्थमाचक्ष्महे ’ ॥ A third explanation of his redness is that he was although stained (लाङ्छित) with the अलक—dye (which is red) from the feet of रोहिणी who angrily kicked her Lord in the amorous sport. This aspect of lover’s quarrel is well-known in sanskrit literature. Cf. ‘एकः सख्यास्तव सह मया वामपादाभिलाषी’ मेघदूत; and मालविकाग्निमित्रम् Act 3. अलक्तक is a red dye of the red resin of certain trees, or red lac, used by women to colour their lips and soles of the feet. रोहिणी is the favourite of the moon from amongst the other constellations, all twenty-seven of whom are the daughters of दक्ष प्रजापति.

Make the three adjectives पाटलित (श्वेतरेक्त), whitish red, शोणीकृत dark red (rather black) and thirdly अलक्तकरसलाङ्छित bright red, the three different aspects of the advancing moon. Kaleidoscopic descriptions are a speciality of Bhāṇa. The condition of Mahāśwetā at the sight of this flushed moon is given in three antithetical phrases. अन्तर्ज्व.....हृदया—In whom the fire of love was blazing inside (hence illumined inside) yet whose heart was full of darkness (owing to perplexity as to which course she should follow). तरलिकोत्सङ्ग.....वर्तिनी. She was reclining on the lap (उत्सङ्ग) of Taralikā तरलिकाया उत्सङ्गे अङ्के विधृतं शरीरं यस्याः सा; with all that she was (metaphorically) held by hand by cupid. She was under the influence of passion and it was this passion that guided her now onwards. An elderly person holds the hand of a child while guiding him. चन्द्रगतनयनाऽपि though having her eyes fixed on the moon (i.e. gazing at the moon physically) मृत्युमालोकयन्ती facing death (metaphorically); the sight of the moon (because of its exciting aspect) was now utterly unbearable, and she feared that he would perhaps cause death; hence the description. That very moment, his sight inspired in her the following thoughts; see how helpless is Mahāśwetā now. एकत्र खलु.....समस्ताः All the factors inspiring love and causing excitement are here assembled—Youth, passion (मदन), the month of Chaitra (with its exciting vernal glory) and the malaya breezes (though physically cool to an ordinary person, fanning the excitement in a love-sick person). Mahāśwetā is a victim of all at the same time. All these are attacking her from one side (एकत्र) while on the other (एकत्र) is the चन्द्रहतक. Her heart, under the attack of the former is already अतिदुर्विषह...तुरम्. अतिदुःखेन सह्यन्ते या मदनवेदनाः ताभिः आतुरम् (greatly afflicted). Now the sight of the moon is an addition of fuel to fire, which she describes in a phrase rather synonymous to adding fuel to fire. सदाहज्वरग्रस्तस्य—of a person consumed by the inflammatory fever. सदाहः दाहयुक्तः यः ज्वरः तेन ग्रस्तस्य. अंगारवर्षः a shower of burning coal. तुषारपातः snow-fall. विषस्य स्फोटः the state of a (bursting) तेन मूर्च्छितः the idea is—person who is fainting under the bursting of poison, would be fatally aggravated by the bite of a deadly cobra. कृष्णसर्प or a black serpent is supposed to be most poisonous. The idea in these three expressions is the same; that condition of one who is already being extremely tormented by some severe agony is fatally aggravated by factors which add fuel to fire. Her heart was already afflicted by the unbearable agonies of excited passion; to that the sight of the moon is now an addition. The result is a foregone conclusion either death or swoon and she did swoon.

इत्येवं विचिन्तयन्तीमेव—To her who was thus worrying—a locative absolute construction with एव has the sense of 'as soon as', 'while'. चन्द्रोदयोपनीता—brought on by the moon-rise, applicable to both मूर्च्छा कमलवनम्लानिनिद्रा. The (day) lotus-creeper that begin to fade with their day-lotuses (that close with close of the day) is said to be overcome with sleep in the form of fading of the lotus-beds and it is caused by the moon (lit. at the moon-rise). Swoon overtook her (it was the logical result of the moon rise) and she closed her eyes. अचिरेण... उपलब्धसंज्ञा—रुदती तरलिकां—अपश्यम्—she came to senses shortly after and saw that Taralikā was in tears. Taralikā though perplexed, promptly began to smear her body with sandal-paste and fanned her. This brought Mahāśwetā to consciousness. Taralikā had applied to her forehead the oozing moonstone, the cool touch of which helped her to come to herself quickly. This crystalline gem is poetically supposed to ooze in the lunar rays. (These two were perhaps in the balcony of the palace; hence Mahāśwetā's sight of the moon and the oozing of this moon-stone). Taralikā was extremely frightened to see her fainted and was very dejected; she was the dejection in bodily form (मूर्तेन विषादेनाधिष्ठिता) as it were; she was weeping shedding continuous showers of tears which darkened her face. Her face was darkened by the absence of smile that was displaced by dejection, but it is poetically described so by the showers of tears, suggesting the appearance of sky darkened with clouds eclipsing the moon in the rainy season. अविच्छिन्नाः अखंडिताः सन्तताः बाष्पजलानां अश्रूणां धाराः ताभिः अन्धकारितं मुखं यस्याः सा. Final अ of a बहुव्रीहि compound is changed to ई when the comp. is feminine. Peterson's reading रुदन्तीम् seems to be a misprint for the form is not grammatically admissible. Not much time has elapsed since Mahāśwetā sought Taralikā's advice (on page 37); though the description of the moonrise occupied a longer space, the physical phenomenon did not take a long time. Now comes Taralikā's reply. उन्मीलिते लोचने यस्याः तां going with मां. कृतः पादयोः प्रणामः यया सा (तरलिका) with her hands wet with sandal-paste बद्धाञ्जलिः बद्धः अञ्जलिः ययाः सा (तरलिका). That she lost no time in taking decision is suggested by the condition that her hands were still wet with sandal-paste (she had applied to Mahāśwetā's body). भर्तृदारिके.....वा. किम् with the instrumental cause, has the sense of what is the use of,.....वा । This is an answer to her first alternative यदि तावत्...विहाय लज्जा.....गुरुजनाति-क्रमात् महान् अधर्मो भवेत्. Now remains the second alternative which is self-refuted. The only solution is स्वयमभिगमन. So she suggests to her (Mahāśwetā) either to send her (तरलिका) to Puṇḍarika (प्रेषय माम्) that she may bring him who was dear (दयित) to her, or to prepare herself (उत्तिष्ठ), become ready (lit. stand up) and go herself (स्वयम्) i.e. without waiting for any consideration. गम्यताम् Imperative III sing. of गम् (passive). The imperative in the passive is a polite way of expression (Apte's guide § 191 A). This course she stresses for she is conscious of the powerful influence on the excited love. अतः परम्..... मकरचिह्नम्.....मकरचिह्न whose emblem is मकर—The cupid, who is characterised by the मकर—(sea animal, alligator). प्रबलस्य चन्द्रस्य उदयेन विद्युम्भमाणं प्रकटीक्रियमाणम् उत्कलिकानां (मदनपक्षे उत्कंडानां, सागरपक्षे, वीचीनां) शतं यस्मिन् सः सागरः मदनः च. 'उत्कलिका तु हेलयां तरंगोत्कंडयोरपि' एवं वादिनीम्—एवं वदति इति ताम् तरलिकाम्. अवोचम् Aorist

1st person. singular of वच् 2 p. उन्मत्ते addressed to Taralikā 'You mad girl'. This is a very cruel remark concerning Taralikā in the mouth of Mahāśwetā, for it is difficult to justify its use. The only explanation that could be offered is that Mahāśwetā is too much beside herself to use a mild and considerate expression. Neither of the alternatives that Taralikā proposed viz., to send her or to go herself could have justified this remark. But the first of these would have caused delay, her excitement could not tolerate it, hence this expression. किं मन्मथेन what have I to do with the god of love? This is to refute Taralikā's remark that Mahāśwetā would not endure the passion. For the moon कुमुदबान्धव had cut short all those excuses through consideration of which she had deferred the undertaking of the first alternative of going herself. So she says अयं कुमुदबान्धवः आगतः एव, (सः) मृत्योः तस्य (पुण्डरीकस्य) वा सकाशं मां नेता नेतुं उद्युक्तः—सर्वविकल्पान् परिहरन् etc. This series means "making short of different excuses!—display of the vocabulary. अपहरन् (अपहृ), उत्सारयन् (उत्सृ causal) अन्तरयन् (अन्तर den.) उन्मूलयन् (उन्मूल), अपनयन् (अपनी), आवृण्वन् (आवृ 5 P), तिरस्कुर्वन् (तिरस्कृ), परिहरन् (परिहृ) are present participles of roots giving practically the same idea, viz., 'removing'. अन्तरायः an obstacle, संदेहः a doubt, शंका fear, apprehension, लज्जा sense of shame, लाघवदोषः the fault of levity. कालस्य अतिपातः delay, उपायदर्शनानि (दर्शनस्य उपायाः or उपायस्य दर्शनानि) the means to see him (पुण्डरीक) or the seeing (search) of means (to alleviate the fever of love). यथा कथंचित् can be construed with अनुगमनेन somehow going after him. Construe either जीविता अभिगमनेन तं जनं कथंचित् संभावयामि or तं जनं प्रति अभिगमनेन कथंचित् जीविता आत्मानं संभा० or with संभावयामि कथंचिदुतिष्ठम् with a great difficulty I got up. मदनविकारगतामूर्छा तस्याः खेदः (exhaustion) तेन विह्वलानि अंगानि तैः तां तरलिकामेवावलम्ब्य. उच्छलितायाश्च मे As I got up. दुर्निमित्तस्य निवेदकम्—suggestive of an ill omen. दक्षिणं लोचनं अस्पन्दत the right eye throbbed. The throbbing of the eyes (of the right in the case of women and of the left men) is portentous or indicative of bad omen; so also of the arm. Cf. मृच्छकटिक IX, सव्यं च नेत्रं स्फुरति प्रसह्य ममानिमित्तानि हि खेदयन्ति. उपजाता शंका यस्यां सा (अहं) in whom apprehension was roused. किमिदं अपरं what is this (new) thing. उपक्षिप्तं cropped up.

PP. 39-40. अथ नाति.....अवातरम् ।

In the delightful and exciting atmosphere of the moonlight, Mahāśwetā in the garb of an अभिसारिका starts with Taralikā to proceed to Puṇḍarīka. The whole of the paragraph is one sentence, the main cause being

(तादृशे समये) अहं तरलिकया अनुगम्यमाना (अक्षमालापरिजातमंजरीभूषिता) रक्तांशुकेन कृतशिरोवर्गुठ्ठा,.....तस्मात् प्रसादशिखरात् अवातरम् । In the series of locative absolutes Bāṇa has characteristically painted the appearance and the atmosphere of the moonlit world and has given us glimpses into the nocturnal ventures of the lovers. The first clause is अथ नातिदूरोद्गतेन...चन्द्रमण्डलेन श्लाघ्यमाने ज्योत्स्नया भुवनान्तराले. श्लाघ्यमान is the present pass. part. of द्रु caus. to drown. न अतिदूरोद्गतेन that had not arisen long before or far away. Both the meanings are equally admissible. For not much time had passed since the moon had arisen. Yet the moon's haunt Kailasa being near, the moon too was quite near. (The scene is set not on this earth but on the heights of the Himalayas i.e. partly in the heavens and so the rising moon was not at a long distance from them.) भुवनान्तराल the space between the two worlds.—The moon with a white shining flood of light is compared to a big water-course (ver. पन्हाळ-प्रणाल) in the palace in the form of the three worlds त्रयाणां भुवनानां समाहारः त्रिभुवनम् तदेव प्रासादः तस्मिन् महान् प्रणालः (water-course) तं अनुकरोति (imitating)—this qualifies चन्द्रमण्डलेन. वहता, क्षरता, वमता उद्गिरता are rather synonymous, meaning sending down, oozing, raining, showering—all are pres. participles. सुधा एव सलिलं तस्य प्लवः—the flood of water in the form of nectar. सुधा or nectar is supposed to have sprung from the ocean while it was being churned, and the moon is said to be the storehouse of it and hence its epithet सुधाकर. Naturally its rays, cool and delightful, are evaluated as nectar. The nectar is imagined to be white. चन्दनरसः तस्य निर्झराः (showers) तेषां निकरः (mass.). The sandal-paste too is white, cool and delightful like the light of the moon. श्वेतगंगा आकाशगंगा तस्याः प्रवाहाः तेषां सहस्राणि. अमृतमयः सागरः तस्य पूरः All the four standards of comparison are cool, white and pleasant like the moon-light. Now the whole surface of the earth was illumining with the moonshine that the poet fancies further. श्वेतद्वीप the white island is characterized by whiteness, while the people residing in the moon-land are so blessed with the constant moonshine, hence the next two fancies महावराह°.....महीमण्डल. The earth being lifted up from the milky ocean must be appearing white. He who lifted it was the Primordial Boar whose round tusk was white even as (a far-fetched comparison) the orb of the moon. That former incident appeared, as though, repeated as the globe of the earth was flooded with the light. At the moonrise ladies in every house (भवने भवने इति प्रतिभवनम्)

had started offerings (उपहियमाणः अर्घोपहारः cf. अर्घ) in honour of the rising moon. अर्घ is a material of worship, respectful offering or oblations to gods or venerable men consisting of rice, दूर्वा grass, etc. with or without water. The ingredients of this offering are आपः क्षीरं कुषाग्रं च दधि सर्पिः सतण्डुलम् । यवः सिद्धार्थकश्चैव अष्टांगोऽर्घः प्रकीर्तितः. Many times the अर्घ consisted of water with whatever of the material available. Cf. कुटजकुसुमैः कक्षितार्घाय तस्मै—मेघदूत 4. But in the present case it consisted of full-blown night (white) lotuses (for they are moon-lotuses) which made the water scented and of sandal paste. कामिनीभिः प्रहिताः (sent or despatched) दूत्यः (female messengers of love) तासां सहस्राणि तैः संकुलाः (thronged). The next clause describes the flight of अभिसारिकाs in consternation at the rise of the moon. (चंद्रलोकेन प्रकाशेन भयाकुला अत एव चकिताः); they move in dark but this moonrise is quite exposing them. They had put on blue veils—their prescribed attire—to harmonise with the darkness in which they move so that they may not be recognized). नीलांशुकेन रचितं अवगुण्ठनं—(veil) यासां. पलायमानासु loc. sing. of pres. part. of परा + अय् to run away. These अभिसारिकाs are full of passion and as such quite flushed but they are veiled in blue; with this material Bāṇa strikes a fine simile in so far as the reddish glory of lotus-beds (the flowers of which are red) disappears for they close with the night-fall—when rises the moon. (Hence चन्द्रालोकभयचकितासु is applicable here also). Its place is taken by the lustre of blue lotuses that bloom by night; hence the description that the अभिसारिकाs veiled in blue appeared to have had their grace (प्रभा) eclipsed (पिहित) like the glory of lotus-beds concealed by the lustre of the blue lotuses. प्रतिकुमुदम्—derived like प्रतिभवनम् (अव्ययी०) on every flower of which swarms of bees had settled. In the artificial wells attached to the houses the lotus-plants bloomed (प्रबुध्यमानासु कुमुदिनीषु). The next clause is an epic simile: the white night-lotus had bloomed and the thick mass of their pollen was drifted (by the breezes) into the sky and the mid region; the sky over these gardens, so thick with pollen, looked like white sandy bank of the (dark) river that was the dark night. But the word पुलिन should better be taken here in the sense of an islet (in the dark river in the form of the dark night surrounding it). Even though the surface of the earth was full of light, the region above was dark due to the influence of night. चन्द्रो...निर्भर...the people were filled with ecstatic joy (आनन्दनिर्भर) at the Moonrise. So is the sea which swells on that account—the physical phenomenon of

tide. In that state the world appeared to be merged in the pleasures of love, indulging wholeheartedly in the festivities (उत्सव) and so on. विलास, amorous dalliance. प्रीतिमय full of love. This was the early part, the first watch of night (प्रदोष) so delightful (रम्य) with the notes of peacocks that were rendered talkative (मुखर) through ecstasy (प्रकृष्टः मोदः तेन). A person overjoyed at a thing which fascinates him is apt to vent himself in musical note. The peacocks have a peculiar fascination for the thundering of the cloud which in this case was supplied by (the sound of) streams of oozes from the water-channel that were fashioned out of or studded with moonstones. This lavish description of gems (rather out of the way) is reflected in भारत चंपू and also in नैषधीयचरित in the description of कुण्डिनपुर. Uptil now the exciting atmosphere has been woven in close texture with the flood of moon light, the yearning women folk busy with night offerings; the lovers' messengers, the अभिसारिकाs, the delighting atmosphere scented with the fragrance of lotuses, the murmur of bees—all the cumulative effect is expressed in जीवलोकै रतिरसमये इव विलायसमये इव प्रीतिमये इव; added to that is the note of peacocks. The effect of these things on Mahāśwetā who is unbearably love-sick can better be imagined. At such a time Mahāśwetā starts. अनुगम्यमाना pres. pass. part. of गम् with अनु to follow. विविधानि कुसुमानि ताम्बूलं च अंगरागः पटवासार्यं चूर्णं (cosmetic powders) एतेषां समाहारः (this comp. is already referred to.) गृहीतं एतत् यया सा qualifying तरलिका; connect this with केनचित् आरम्भियेनापि परिजनेन अनुलक्ष्यमाणा (unobserved); आत्मीय possessive adjective from आत्मन् one's own. किञ्चिदा०—अलकेन किञ्चिद् अंशतः आश्याना शुष्कपांडुरा (dried and white). चन्दनरसकल्पिता ललाटिका (The smear in the form of a dot) तस्यां लग्नत्वात् धूसरा (dusty, soiled) आकुलाः अव्यवस्थिता अलकाः यस्मिन् यस्या; तथैव०.....चन्दनरसेन चर्चा तथा तथा च अंगरागः इत्यादिभिः युक्तः वेषः. The instrumental case shows characteristics इत्थंभृतलक्षणे तृतीया; with these two, connect मूर्च्छानिहितेन—मूर्च्छायां निहितेन तथैव च तथामंजर्या. तथैव (i) similarly, in the same way (ii) in the same condition. The rosary was round her neck in the same place as she had put on when taken from Puṇḍarika, and the nosegay of Pūrijāta was in the same place—on her ear where it was placed by Puṇḍarika. She had put on a veil of red silk, so fine was it that it was, as though, woven with the rays of the rubies (which are red). पद्मरागरत्नानां रश्मयः तैः निर्मितम् इव. P. 40—P. 41 L. 6.

अवतीर्थ च.....अतिव्रितमगच्छम् । As she proceeds she muses how, though unattended she was, she was guarded by servants in some other form. She imagines the plight of love-sick Puṇḍarīka; Taralikā diverts her saying that the moon himself is excited and as such full of gesticulations of love. But as she reaches the lake she hears from a distance somebody lamenting. Nervously she quickens her pace.

This passage describes her journey from her palace to the lake and how they two diverted themselves. अवतीर्य च.....तत्समीपमुदचलम्. प्रमदवनपक्षद्वारेण—through a side gate of the प्रमदवन lit. Queen's garden, garden reserved for the ladies. In royal palaces this was usually met with. पारिजातकुसुम.....धावता मधुकरजालेन (नील.....विभ्रममिव संपादयता) अनुबध्यमाना this qualifies अहम्. अनुबध्यमाना pres. pass. part. from अनुबध् to chase, follow close. The nosegay had an exceptionally fascinating fragrance, which was proved by the fact that Mahāśweṭā herself was attracted by it in spite of the spring spending lavishly over its vernal floral glory. This was tested again inasmuch as all the bees from the neighbouring gardens were attracted by it. (पारिजातस्य कुसुममंजर्यां परिमलेन आकृष्टेन—an adjective of मधुकरजालेन). They had vacated (रिक्तीकृत) the neighbouring (उप) gardens (or woods.) and ran after her. रिक्तीकृत is a च्वि formation from रिक्त p. p. of रिच् (VII) to empty, to vacate. So thick was their swarm, moving after her (अनुबध्यमाना) as she proceeded, that it produced (संपादयता) an illusion (विभ्रमः) of a blue veil. After तत्समीपम् supply गन्तुम्. प्रयान्ती च.....अचिन्तयम् she was attended only by Taralikā (तरलिका एव द्वितीया यस्याः सा) and without any servant. आत्मानम् oneself. This word is always used in masculine sing. irrespective of the number and gender of its substantive as in this case where it stands for महाश्वेता which is feminine. The next six lines are musings over the word अपरिजन. It was night-time and she was passing through a forest. Again, she was a princess; so there ought to be, by retinue, some armed guards, a usherer and other attendants. She fancies the presence of these all. बाह्यपरिजन—external attendants, actual servants. She flatters herself that there is no need of outward suite to a lady who makes bold to move towards her lord. किम् कृत्यम्—what's the use, of what avail (to be used with the instrumental case). She means that she is guarded by far more intimate (lit. internal as opposed to external) and loyal servants. For these, viz., cupid, the moon, passion (redness), the sense of shame, the heart, senses, and yearning, play the role of servants. तथा हि for instance, for example, to wit. The next sentences have two meanings. समारोपितं.....कुसुमायुध—समारोपितं अभिज्यं (string) शरसनं धनुः तस्मिन् आसक्तः सायकः बाणः येन असौ मदनः. The cupid is following me with an arrow fixed to his bow which is strung. He is following me as an armed guard. Euphuism apart, this means that the God of love is making me his target क is chasing me ; I am really running, impelled by love. दूरप्रसारितकरः कर्षति शशी (i) The moon with arms stretched is dragging me (ii) because of the maddening influence of the bewitching rays of the moon, I am dragged to my lover. प्रस्वलनभयात् out of fear of slipping or falling (प्र+स्वल to slip) रागः redness. मां पदे पदे अवलंबते. The idea is that as she was proceeding along the forest surface so uneven she feared at every step that she might fall, and thus she became red. A servant also supports his master at every step so that he should not fall. पृष्ठतः कृत्वा (1) leaving back (2) setting aside. लज्जा the sense of shame was an obstacle in her way (Cf. विहाय लज्जां p. 37.). But her heart stimulated by love, sets it aside, runs ahead as do the servants. निश्चयमारोप्य—having made me ride. She means that the carriage for her use is the resoluteness and the carrier is longing ; this simply suggests that because of her fervent yearning her mind becomes resolute and she is going. प्रकाशम्—openly. अपि नाम or अपि suggests “hope,” or ‘expectation’. (Apte’s guide § 247) इन्दुहतकः—the wretched moon किरणैः केशेषु ग्रहः (seizing by the hair) तेन आकृष्टः तम् (पुण्डरीकम्). She was being dragged to Puṇḍarīka as though her hair was seized by the moon with her stretched hands that were his rays. Would he not, says she, drag Puṇḍarīka hither i. e. towards me, in the same way. But Taralīkā in a lighter jesting mood repudiates her, saying that she was too simple or ignorant (मुग्धाऽसि). What had the moon to do (किम्) with him (अनेन जनेन) (Puṇḍarīka) i. e. why should he mind Puṇḍarīka. He has himself fallen in love with Mahāśwetā ; then why need he mind Puṇḍarīka. The moon is acting like a love-sick person (मदनेन आतुरः) ; the gesticulations of such a person are now deliberately imposed on the poor moon. Every physical phenomenon concerning the moon has been euphuistically looked upon as मदनातुरस्य चेष्टाः. Through excitement her cheeks were full of thick particles of perspiration (स्वेदः एव सलिलम् तस्य कणिकाः particles of sweat, तैः चितम्—crowded. In these drops the moon was reflected. These reflections on her cheeks are looked upon as the kissing of the moon. लावण्यवति^० The rays were falling on the buxom bosom. This is construed as the moon falling on her protruding and charming bosom. With her extended hands the rays at times fell on the jewels of her girdle (रशना) when they (the jewels) flashed. This is taken as the moon’s further bold advances so as to touch the girdle. The love-smitten moon fell at her feet—in reality the moon was reflected in her stainless nails of the feet. किं च—what more, besides, in addition. In the next five lines all the actions of the moon are construed as the behaviour of a love-stricken fellow. Such a person is pale (पाण्डु) with the smear of sandal-paste drying through the fervour of love. तापः ज्वरः तेन शुष्कः चन्दनालेपः तेन पाण्डुता. Such a pallor (quite inherent, and not through such a cause) did attend the moon. To appease the heat of passion lovers wear round their wrist armlets of lotus-fibres with which their hand become white. Such a whiteness was there in the moon's rays (also he touched the fibres with his pale rays). Lovers take shelter on the cool pavements (कुट्टिम) of crystal slabs; the moon too under the pretext of reflection fell on them. Lovers with their feet dusky (धूसर) with the pollen inside the ketaki, bathe in lotus-pools while the moon with his rays (पादाः) similarly (in fact naturally) white entered the pools of night-lotuses. The persons tormented by passion touch the moon-stones which (when oozing) are cool, as though, through showers of water. सलिलस्य सीकैः हव आर्द्राः (wet) मणयः. The moon too touching (आमृशति) the moon-stones with his rays (कैः) makes them ooze sprays of water (सलिल-सीकराः) and hence makes them wet (आर्द्र). Lovers in separation cannot stand the sight of the beds of lotuses with chakravāka-pairs wailing (full of distress) through separation. The moon also is (poetically) apathetic (द्वेष्टि) towards the beds of day-lotuses (कमलवनानि) (the poet imagines out of the same excuse). एतैश्च अन्यैश्च—these and similar ones. तस्मिन् काले उचिताः—suited to that particular occasion, opportune. आलापाः—talks. अभ्युपागमम्—अभि+उप+गम् aorist I sing. There she washed her feet (चरणयुगलं प्रक्षालयन्ती) धूसरं dusty (qualifying) चरण-युगलम्. कैलासपर्वतस्य तदा उदितचन्द्रकिरणैः प्रसृताः ये चंद्रकान्तमणिद्रवाः तेषां प्रस्रवणेषु.—In these streams she washed her feet. सः पुण्डरीकः. पुरुषस्य हव possibly of a man.

The main sentence is...विलपन्तं कपिजलमश्रौषम्. निशीथ = night, there is silence during night and everything can be clearly heard. आर्तनाद= sound indicating affliction. दुर्विनीते—O you ill-fondled one! अपगत-दाक्षिण्य दक्षिणानिलहतक.—O you wretched southern wind, having no sense of generosity. बहेदानीं यथेष्टं—move about as you like now as there is no one to restrict you, now that Puṇḍarika is dead. हा भर्म

निष्परिग्रहोऽसि. Pity had now become supportless as its great support viz., Puṇḍarīka was dead and gone. एकपदे=suddenly. स्वहते=without you. देहि मे प्रतिवचनम् give me a reply—please speak.

तच्च श्रुत्वामद्राक्षम् ।

Mahāśvetā utters a loud scream and runs to the place. She finds there Puṇḍarīka's body lying on a bed of flowers and fibres, on the slab. She, fearfully excited, imagines him posed in various conditions. Puṇḍarīka is dead.

The main sentence is तच्च श्रुत्वा...दूरादेव मुक्तैकताराक्रन्दा.....
.....तमहं...मद्राक्षम् । पतितैरिव प्राणैः—with my life, as it were gone. मुक्तैकताराक्रन्दा मुक्तः एकतारः आक्रन्दः यया—who had given out one loud scream of distress. सरस्तीरलतासक्तियुक्त्यमानांशुकोत्तरीया—सरसः तीरे या लता (creeper) तस्या आसक्त्या (contact) श्रुत्यमानं (torn) अंशुकस्य उत्तरीयं यस्याः; अज्ञातसमविषमभूमिभागैः—अज्ञातः समः विषमश्च भूमेर्भागः येषु एवं विन्यस्तैः so placed that the even or uneven parts of the ground were not noticed. केनाप्युत्क्षिप्य नीयमानेव—as if being taken away lifted up by someone. This suggests that she was not acting consciously. Mahāśvetā went there and saw him lying on a lotus-bed, which was arranged (विरचितं) near the bank of the lake (सस्तीरसमीपवर्तिनि) on a slab of moon-stone (शशिमणि) that was oozing and showering a cold spray (शिशिरसीकरासारस्त्राविणि). शशिमणि = the moon-stone, supposed to ooze away under the influence of the moon. Cf. द्रवति च हिमरश्मावुद्धते चन्द्रकान्तः । उत्तररामचरितम् VI. 12. कुमुदकुवलयकमलविविधनवकुसुमसुकुमारमालामयमिव—कुमुदानि (night lotuses, white in colour) कुवलयानि (blue lotuses) कमलानि विविधानि च नवकुसुमानि तेषां सुकुमारा (tender) या माला (garland) तन्मयमिव. कुसुमशरसायकमयमिव—which was like the arrow of cupid. A lotus is one of the five arrows of cupid. Cf. अरविन्दमशोकं च चूतं च नवमल्लिका । नीलोत्पलं च पञ्चैते पञ्चबाणस्य सायकाः ॥ अतिनिष्पन्दता—extremely motionless—and therefore it appeared that he was, as though, hearing the sound of her soles. In fact he was dead. अन्तःकोप etc. He was sleeping quietly. Even though he was being tormented by cupid, that heat was allayed by his inward wrath (अन्तःकोप) for Mahāśvetā. The idea is that the heat caused by anger destroyed the heat caused by cupid and gave him the necessary happiness (cf. the Marathi proverb काव्याने काटा काढणे.) मनःशोभ etc. He was, as though, practising Prāṇāyāma (holding one's breath) as expiation against the wrath in mind. It is to be noted that in fact

Puṇḍarīka was dead but he is imagined as doing all these things. Prāṇāyāma or holding one's breath is a method of expiating for the sins done by an individual. अतिस्फुटित etc. He was, as though, telling me i. e. (Mahāśvetā) with his lower lip that was throbbing that he was reduced to that state on account of me. Death embraced him because he fell in love with her. इन्दुद्वेष etc. He was lying on the ground with the rays of the moon falling on his back. He had placed his hand on his chest and rays were shooting from the nails of his hand. The author imagines that the rays that were near his chest were the rays of the moon that had pierced their way from the back right through his heart to the other side. The reason why he had placed his hand on his heart was because it was मदनविह्वल. It has to be noted that rays would not shoot from the nails of a dead person. It is possible however because Puṇḍarīka was just dead. उच्छुष्क etc. He had worn on his forehead a mark of sandal-paste of the shape of a crescent moon. It appeared like an ominous sign. A crescent moon is said to be a पापग्रहः मत्तः प्रियतर etc. Life seemed to abandon him as it thought that he loved somebody (viz. Mahāśvetā) more than itself (viz. his own life). This indicates his love for Mahāśvetā. मत्तः—more than me (मत्+तत्स्). तत्स् is a termination of ablative. Cf. मत्तो न मत्तः परः । also भाष्यकृत् पतञ्जलिः कात्यायनस्य वचनानि विस्तरतो व्याचष्टे । मन्मथव्यथया etc. He was enjoying the pleasure of unconsciousness (निश्चेतनता) (or trance) after leaving his life along with the affliction caused by cupid. This is an instance of the figure of speech called सहोक्ति. It is defined as सहोक्तिः सा सहार्थस्य बलादेकं द्विवाचकम् । काव्यप्रकाश X. as in लज्जया सहागलदक्षमाला । or पपात भूमौ सह सैनिकाश्रुभिः । अनङ्गयोगविद्या—The mystic science of conquering Cupid (अनङ्ग). Cupid is known as अनङ्ग (body-less) because his body was burnt to ashes by Lord Śiva. उपपादित etc. This is a rather far-fetched idea. Mahāśvetā went there ; it was Madana who brought her arrival there ; he therefore received a पूर्णपात्र, the contents of which were the life of Puṇḍarīka. When a stranger brought some good news, it was customary to give him (or her) a vessel (पूर्णपात्र) filled with valuable things (such as clothes or ornaments etc.). Cf. कदा ते तनयजन्ममहोत्सवानन्दनिर्भरो हरिष्यति पूर्णपात्रं परिजनः । कादम्बरी and also तत्कामं भवति पूर्णपात्रद्वय्या स्वीकर्तुं मम हृदयं जीवितं च ॥ मालतीमाधव IV. पूर्णपात्र is defined as हर्षादुत्सवकाले यदलंकारांशुकादिकं । आकृष्य गृह्यते पूर्णपात्रं स्यात्पूर्णकं च तत् ॥ or वर्षापरकं च यदानन्दादलङ्कारादिकं पुनः । आकृष्य गृह्यते पूर्णपात्रं पूर्णनकं च यत् ॥ The idea in this clause is that cupid who was responsible for

Puṇḍarika's death had as it were received a vessel (पूर्णपात्र) filled with a costly thing (viz., पुण्डरीक's life). The next clause is मनोभवव्रतवेषमास्थाय मत्समागममन्त्रमिव साधयन्तम् ।—as though reciting the song of union with me—putting on a dress necessary for मनोभवव्रत. The dress was (i) three lines of sandal-paste on the forehead (त्रिपुण्ड्रक) (ii) a sacred thread (यज्ञोपवीत) of lotus-fibres full of juice (घृतरस) (iii) a beautiful piece of garment (चारुचीरं) in the form of banana-leaf (कदलीगर्भपत्र) placed on the shoulders (iv) a necklace in the form of a rosary of broad beads (v) white with the ash of thick clear powder of camphor (कर्पूर) and (vi) attractive on account of string of lotus fibres tied (round the wrist) for protection. One of the commentators connect all these adjectives with the word महाभागम्. But it does not sound appropriate. The next clause is संप्रणयं मासुपालभमानमिव चक्षुषा—as though affectionately remonstrating me with his eyes. ईपदालक्ष्य परिवृत्ततारकेण—the pupil of which was slightly diverted from the object of sight. अविरतरोदनतात्रेण—red on account of incessant weeping. It had contracted itself by one-third on account of the arrows of cupid (मदनशर) looked as if blood was coming out of them (they were in fact red) as tears could not come out as he was dead (प्राणोत्सर्ग). The adjectives have been regarded as interpolations. He was, as though, addressing me “O you hard-hearted one, you have not favoured even by mere sight this person (i. e. Puṇḍarika himself) who followed you (अनुगतो जनः). The next clause is धवलितपुरोभागं—with the forepart whitened by the rays shooting from his teeth. The author imagines that they were the rays of the moon that had entered his body with a view to kill him and were now coming out. He was killed by the rays of the moon because they created passion in him, resulting in his death. The next adjective is मन्मथव्यथा etc.—holding me who was in his heart (हृदयस्थितां) as it were with his left hand (वामेन पाणिना) that was placed on the heart that was breaking with the affliction caused by Cupid (मन्मथव्यथा). He was addressing her thus “Be pleased (प्रसीद) O you! who are as dear to me as my life, don't go away along with my life”. The next clause is चन्द्रातपमिव वारयन्तम् । with the other hand—नखमयूखदन्तुरतया—bristling with the rays coming from the nails he was as if warding off the moonlight. The next clause is:—कमण्डलुना उपेतं—with a कमण्डलु (pot) with its neck upturned, (it is always placed like that) as though looking for the path by which his life had left him. This is a bright idea. The kamaṇḍalu was simply lying there. The author imagines that it was looking up to see the path by which the life left him. The next adjective is कण्ठाभरणीकृतेन^०—as though being tied round by lotus-fibres in the form of the rays of the moon and being taken to the other world. (लोकान्तरं अन्यः लोकः). Kapīñjala saw her and shouted Abrahmanyam. द्विगुणीभूतबाष्पोद्गमेन—with the flow of tears coming out doubly.

Mahāśvetā swoons; she wails in various ways, expresses her grief in so many words, abusing and cursing the various objects that wrought this calamity. She weeps profusely, caresses him incessantly, implores every divinity near about to bring him back to life and faints again and again. She does not know whence could she get all the words with which she lamented.

उद्धूतमूर्च्छान्धकारा—overpowered by the darkness (अन्धकार) caused by fainting (मूर्च्छा). She could not understand where she went, what she did and what she talked. किम्—this word is used here four times in the sense of 'whether'. अनेकदुःखसहस्रसहिष्णुतया—on account of her capacity to bear thousands of other griefs. जन्मान्तरोपात्त—acquired in the last birth. Deeds done in the past birth result in something which is known as दैव or Fate. Cf. जन्मान्तरकृतं कर्म तदैवमिति कथ्यते । असह्यशोकदहमान—burning with unbearable grief. किमिदमुपनतं—What's this that has befallen me ! Mahāśvetā is prattling as she is extremely aggrieved at the death of Puṇḍarika. Her शोक is described by the author in a very simple but touching manner. युगसहस्रायमाणो दिवसः—one day which is felt to be as long as thousands of ages. अलीकानुरागप्रतारण-कुशलया—clever in cheating (प्रतारण) by a sham show of affection, कौलीन=scandal कौलीनं. भवति—that which at last goes to the dust (कु=पृथिवी) or कुलीनस्य भावः—scandals are often associated with noble families and hence the word means 'scandal' Cf. कौलीनमात्माश्रयमाचक्षे । रघुवंश XIV. कुले भवं कौलीनम् परिपतितनयनजलधारानिकरच्छलेन—under the guise of lines of tears falling from the eyes. किं मे गृहेण किं वा तातेन etc. For a similar idea cf. मालती's description in Mālātī-Mādhava of Bhavabhūti. मनोरागस्तीव्रं विषमिव विसर्पत्यविरतं प्रमाथी निर्धूमं ज्वलति विधुतः पावक इव । हिनस्ति प्रत्यङ्गं ज्वर इव गरीयानित इतो न मां त्रातुं तातः प्रभवति न चाम्बा न भवती ॥ भूतो—as though struck by a demon. परिपतितनयनजलधारानिकरच्छलेन—परिपतिता या नयनजलस्य (tears) धाराः तासां निकरस्य (collection) छलेन (guise)

मृतस्यापि सर्वात्मना हृदयं प्रवेष्टुमिवेच्छन्ती. Desirous of entering his heart even though he was dead. आश्रयान=slightly dry. मलयजरसलवलुलित-कमलिनीपलाशावगुण्ठिते—मलयजरसस्य (sandal) लवैः (drops) लुलितानि यानि कमलिन्याः पलाशानि (petals) तैः अवगुण्ठिते (covered). तामेकावली-मगर्हयम्—Note how Mahāśvetā lost her balance on account of grief and how she started blaming even inanimate objects like the necklace. अन्य एव स प्रकारः—That was indeed extraordinary. This is an instance of the figure of speech called अतिशयोक्ति (2nd variety). It is defined as 'प्रकृतस्य यदन्यत्वं'. The charm lies in the object in hand being depicted as absolutely unparalleled. For an excellent illustration of this cf. अन्या जगद्धितमयी मनसः प्रवृत्तिः । अन्यैव कापि रचना वचनावलीनाम् ॥ लोकोत्तरा च कृतिराकृतिरार्यद्वया । विद्यावतां सकलमेव गिरां दवीयः ॥. प्रलयोर्मयः—waves of the doomsday.

इत्येवम.....मुपनेतुम् ।

So intense is her grief that even while narrating it she actually loses consciousness. Chandrāpīḍa promptly holds her from falling and brings her back to her senses. Feeling guilty of being incidental to the situation, he apologises.

चेतनां जहार मूर्च्छा—She lost her consciousness, as she narrated the whole terrible account. भगवति मया पापेन—etc. Chandrāpīḍa was extremely sorry that he was the cause of exciting Mahāśvetā's grief. अतिक्रान्तान्यपि संकीर्त्यमानानि etc. This is a general statement. Grievs, though past, create the same agony as when they are actually experienced when they are remembered. The expression प्रियवचनानि is omitted in some editions.

इत्येवमुक्ता.....तदलं श्रूयताम् ।

Mahāśvetā, though full of grief, dispels Chandrāpīḍa's apprehensions, saying that there was no fear of death overcoming her now since she experienced and faced the occasion and continued to live. She, now, narrates the wonderful phenomenon that happened just then, which dissuaded her from throwing away her life.

इत्येवमुक्ता—thus consoled (by Chandrāpīḍa) दीर्घमुष्णं च निःश्वस्य—heaving a hot and heavy sigh—a characteristic action (of ladies particularly) to ventilate (their) intense grief. बाष्पायमाणलोचना—बाष्पायमाणे लोचने यस्याः—qualifies सा (महाश्वेता) बाष्पायमाण—pres. part. from the denominative formed from the nominal base बाष्प (tears)—

“with eyes full of tears” सनिर्वेदम्—निर्वेदेन सहितं यथा स्यात्तथा—‘Despondently’. या तदा.....दूरापेतम् we have seen that Chandrāpīda requested her not to proceed any further with her account since it had made her extremely uneasy. She was filled with thoughts of dejection. The prince was naturally anxious about her health. Mahāśvetā now, removes, from his mind, the feeling of anxiety. She says that her ruthless life that did not desert her then at that frightful and ill-fated night, would never leave her now. No one—nay not even the prince—can imagine such a calamity befalling her now. She had meekly resigned herself to her fate and mere narration of her story would not harm her in any way. दूरापेतम्—दूरे स्थितम्. Note the use of इति. तस्यामिति...हतनिशायाम्—This refers to the night of the death of Puṇḍarīka. It was अतिदारुण (dreadful, frightful) and हत to her. नूनम्.....दर्शनम्—Mahāśvetā says that she is unfortunate and sinful and hence even the Lord of Death viz., Yama is shunning her sight. We are superstitious enough to surreptitiously avoid the sight of ill-fated and sinful persons. The God of Death was afraid of incurring some demerit by coming within the orbit of the influence of Mahāśvetā and hence he avoided coming near her, to take away her life. नूनम् ind. “Most probably, in all probability”. The remark is passed by way of self-condemnation. अन्तक—Yama अन्तयति, अन्तं करोति यः स भगवान् यमः “ऋषिप्रभावान्मयि नान्तकोऽपि प्रभुः प्रहर्तुम्” कुतश्च मे शोकः Grief, even, cannot touch her; so hard-hearted she is. सर्वमिदम्.....शठहृदयस्य—The grief that she had so far exhibited was but a false show (perhaps to win the sympathies of the prince). दुरात्मन् wicked. शठ depraved. Note that throughout this passage she is severely condemning herself. सर्वथाहम्...कृता—अनेन refers to the हृदय (in the preceding sentence). त्यक्ता त्रपा येन—which had (entirely) renounced the sense of shame i.e. which had become absolutely shameless. निरपत्रपाणां अग्रेसरीकृता—I have been made the fore-most of the shameless (women) ‘निर्गता अपत्रपा (यासाम्) अपत्रपा (fr. त्रप् I. A to be ashamed, to hang down the face through shame). ‘Shame, bashfulness’. ‘अग्रेसरी पुरोगामिनी’ यया आविष्कृत.....कथनं प्रति—Construe—आविष्कृतमदनतया यया इदं वज्रमस्या इव अनुभूतम् (तस्याः) कथनं प्रति का वा गणना. Although love was manifest in her, she bore all the agonies of grief, as if, she were fashioned out of adamant. Of what account is, then, the simple narration of her story to her. आविष्कृतः मदनः यया—This was quite a sound reason for her to follow her Love to the grave. Yet she did not. This was because her heart was made of adamants.....she was hard-hearted. वज्रमयी—‘hard, adamant, or cruel’. का वा गणना—of what account. किं वा परमतः.....माख्यातुं वा—She says that there could not be any other account more harrowing, distressing or painful than the one which she had already told. The harrowing part of her story was already narrated by her and heard by the prince. What would now follow would not defy either narration (on her part) or hearing (on the part of the prince) for it is nothing as compared to what had preceded. केवलमस्य.....दावेदयामि—Only the mysterious incident that succeeded that ‘bolt from the blue’ (वज्रपात) now remains to be told. This incident brought to her, unawares, some very slight cause (कारणलव) for sustaining her life अन्यक्त—not (quite) manifest (to me). She, still, cannot account for the mysterious happening. यया दुराशा.....वहामि—This incident filled her with vain hopes and it was this that prevented her from abandoning her life. “Had it not been for this incident,” she means to say, “the prince would not have seen me for by that time I would have been dead and gone in the wake of my Lord”. दुराशामृगतृणिका—दुराशा एव मृगतृणिका. मरुमरीचिका—The mirage in the form of vain or distant hope. मृगतृणिका—used figuratively to denote anything impossible. Cf. the following verse for the four impossibilities. “मृगतृणाम्भसि स्नातः शशशृङ्गधनुर्धरः । वन्ध्यापुत्रोऽयमायाति खपुष्पकृतशेखरः ॥” सुभाषित. Construe ‘मृगतृणिकया with गृहीता. उपरतकल्पम्—This and the following few words in the acc. sing. qualify हतशरीरम्—उपरतकल्पं मृतप्रायम् ‘almost dead’. For the affix कल्प see note supra. परकीयमिव—The body that she was now carrying as though, belonged to someone else for, her own body had already followed Puṇḍarīka. भारभूतम् burdensome. अप्रयोनम्—purposeless. The body serves no purpose now. अकृतज्ञम् ungrateful since it failed to show any gratefulness towards its lord viz. Puṇḍarīka. Note the use of अलम् in अलं श्रूयताम् । अलम् “fully, completely, in detail”.

ततश्च तथाभूते.....तारागणमध्यमविशन् ।

Mahāśvetā continues her narration taking up the thread where she had left it before this small break. She bids Taralikā to arrange the pyre so that she would follow Puṇḍarīka in death. Just then an extraordinary divine vision swoops down from the Moon, picks up Puṇḍarīka's body and consoling Mahāśvetā with soothing words that they would meet again, he flies up into the sky.

Mahāśvetā is amazed at this incident and her confusion becomes worse confounded when the bewildered Kapīñjala disappears into the sky in pursuit of the visionary person.

तथाभूते तस्मिन्नवस्थान्तरे—when things had happened thus in that strange condition. मरणैकनिश्चया—मरणे एव एकः निश्चयः यस्याः qualifies (अहम्) 'bent upon or determined to commit suicide'. तत्तद्बहु विलप्य—I bewailed in various ways. निष्ठुरहृदये—This sounds rather strange. Why should Mahāśvetā call तरलिका निष्ठुरहृदया (निष्ठुरं हृदयं यस्याः) 'hard-hearted'? Taralikā was surely not responsible for hastening the death of Puṇḍarika. It was she herself that was responsible for the tragedy. Why should she, then abuse Taralikā who was, indeed, her friend in need? We can explain this on the ground that Mahāśvetā was beside herself with grief and she had no control over her speech. The expression निष्ठुरहृदये slipped from her mouth unconsciously and unmeaningly. Words, which one would not ordinarily use, escape from the mouth of persons smitten with severe grief. Cf. also the note on उन्मत्ते above. काष्ठान्याहृत्य.....तैश्चरम्—Note that the custom of 'Satee' was prevalent in the days of the author. आहृत्य ger. from हृ with आ 'to collect, to bring or get together' विताम्—pyre, pile. The main sentence is—अत्रान्तरे झटिति.....पुरुषः..... बाहुभ्यां.....तमुपरतमुक्षिपन्.....स्वरेण.....अभिधाय सहैवानेन गगनतलमुदपतत्। अत्रान्तरे—just then. झटिति—suddenly. चन्द्रमण्डलविनिर्गतः This and the following words in the nominative sing. qualify पुरुषः. चन्द्रमण्डलात् निर्गतः 'coming out of the lunar orb.' केयूरकोटि.....माकर्षन्—आकर्षन् fr. कृष् with आ to draw towards, "tucking". The object of आकर्षन् is अंशुकोत्तरीयम् (उत्तरीयं च तत् अंशुकं च) 'silken upper-garment'. The words in the acc. sing. are in apposition to उत्तरीयम्. केयूरकोटिलग्नम्—sticking to the edge of his armlet. अमृतम्—अमृतस्य फेनपिण्डः तद्वत् पाण्डुरम्—white like a ball (पिण्ड) of ambrosial foam (फेन). पवनतरलम्—fluttering in the wind. As the person was descending in a hurry, his garment which was fluttering in the wind got stuck in the edge of his armlet and he was, therefore, setting it right i. e. tucking it. In this description the author has created before us a fine perspective of the person descending hurriedly from the dome of the sky. उभयकर्णां—उभयोः कर्णयोः आन्दोलिते (dangling) कुण्डले तयोः मणिप्रभा तथा अनुरक्तं गण्डस्थलं यस्य—He had put jewelled ear-rings (कुण्डल) in both of his ears. As he was descending, they moved and his broad cheeks (गण्डस्थल) flashed with the (red) lustre of the gems in the ear-rings. स्थूलमुक्ताफल.....दधानः—He wore, on his chest, a highly brilliant (अतितारं) garland of very big pearls. The (big) pearls appeared like a cluster of stars and hence the हार was not of pearls but as it were of stars strung together. The stars and the pearls are white. स्थूलानि मुक्ताफलानि यत्र तस्य भावः तत्ता तया. धवल.....ग्रन्थिः—धवलं यत् दुकूलं तस्य पल्लवेन प्रान्तदेशेन कल्पितः उष्णीषस्य ग्रन्थिः यस्य—The knot of his head-gear (उष्णीष) was made of the skirts (पल्लव) of a white silken garment. अलिकुल.....मौलिः—अलिकुल-वत् नीलाः कुटिलाः कुन्तलाः तेषां निकरः तेन विकटः विपुलः मौलिः यस्य—His head was full of (विकट) clusters of curly (कुटिल) hair dark like a swarm of bees. Dark hair is supposed to be a sign of personal charm. The reading निचित for विकट also gives the same sense. उत्फुल्ल.....पूरः—उत्फुल्ले कुमुदे ते एव कर्णाभरणे यस्य—his ear-ornaments were of full-blown (उत्फुल्ल) moon-lotuses. This is quite appropriate. It may be noted that कर्णपूर does not mean an ear-ring here: the ear-rings are already referred to above. They were not made of lotuses. कामिनी.....देशः—कामिन्याः कुचयोः याः कुङ्कुमपत्रलताः तत्समानाभिः रेखाभिः लाञ्छिताः अंसदेशः यस्य. His broad shoulders were marked with wavy lines of saffron. These lines resembled the पत्रलता with which lustful damsels mark their bosoms. कामिनी refers to damsels in general and not to his wife or wives as some understand. In that case the shoulders will not be marked with पत्रलता. पत्रभङ्ग—लतारेखा are all synonyms. They mean 'the lines or figures of painting on the body (particularly on the cheeks, breasts etc.) drawn with fragrant or coloured substances such as musk, saffron, sandal-juice, yellow pigment etc. by way of decoration'. Cf. "कस्तूरीवरपत्रभङ्गनिकरे मृष्टो न गडस्थले". कुमुदवत् धवलः देहः यस्य—Note again the reference to moon-lotuses. महाप्रमाणः—of extraordinary features. महापुरुषः—endowed with the characteristics of a great person. These लक्षण are enumerated in the सामुद्रिकशास्त्र. They are said to be thirty-two. स्वच्छवारि.....दिगन्तराणि—He bore a halo of radiance which was as pure as transparent water. He, therefore, seemed to be bathing the quarters. The स्वच्छवारि as well as the देहप्रभावितान are white. For देहप्रभावितान cf. the passage occurring in कन्यकावर्णन above. आमोदिना च.....वानुलिम्पन्—The object of अनुलिम्पन् and आसिञ्चन् in the next clause is दिगन्तराणि (which is to be supplied from the preceding clause). Multiple sprays of nectar were dripping from his body. They were fragrant and being cool they as it were produced a shivering sensation. With their showers, he anointed the space as by a thick frost (तुषारपटल). The तुषारपटल is also cool and produces a chill. गोशीर्ष.....वासिञ्चन्—He sprinkled the quarters, as though, with a mass of excellent sandal-paste (गोशीर्षचन्दन).

ऐरावत.....सुक्षिपन्—With his hands he lifted up the dead (Puṇḍarīka). The words in the instr. dual qualify बाहुभ्याम् ऐरावतस्य करवत् पीवराभ्याम्—as massive as the trunk of Airāvata. ऐरावत—इरा आपः तद्वाङ् इरावान् समुद्रः तस्मात् उत्पन्नः. This is the name of Indra's elephant. The arms were fair like the trunk of this elephant. मृणाल०—मृणालवत् धवलाः अङ्गुल्यः ययोः ; शीतलः स्पर्शः ययोः ; तमुपरतम्—This refers to Puṇḍarīka. दुन्दुभिगम्भीरेण स्वरेण—This is to be construed with अभिधाय—with a voice as deep as the (sound of) a drum “वस्से महाश्वेते.....समागमः” These are the words of assurance, which, as she had remarked above, became the प्राणधारणकारणलव. पितेव—like (an earnest) father. अहं तु.....मपृच्छम्—At this strange incident Mahāśvetā experienced a mixed feeling. She was horrified, amazed and filled with curiosity. The effect of all this was that she looked up and requested Kapīñjala to explain the strange phenomenon. But another mystery was in store for her since Kapīñjala without even caring to satisfy her curiosity, flew up into the sky, abusing the mysterious person for depriving him of his dearest friend and disappeared into the firmament pursuing him leaving Mahāśvetā and Taralīkā utterly dumb-founded. ससंभ्रमम्—संभ्रमेण सहितं यथा स्यात्तथा—This is to be connected with उदतिष्ठतु ; उन्मुखः उद्गतं मुखं यस्य, संजातः कोपः यस्मिन्. He was much exasperated. उत्तरीयवल्कलेन (आत्मनः) परिकरं सावेगं बध्नन्—He, in great haste, girt up his loins with his upper bark-garment. One about to jump or perform a certain thing, girds up his loins. उत्पतन्तम्—refers to the divine person. पशन्त्या एव.....मविशन्—while Mahāśvetā was looking on, all of them vanished entering the stars.

मम तु तेन.....क्षपां क्षपितवती ।

Mahāśvetā is paralysed with the happenings. She inquires of Taralīkā what it meant. The poor girl, fearing that her mistress' heart might break, tries to console her stressing the assurance offered by the person who flew up and implores her not to prepare for death and to take a chance. Mahāśvetā, thereupon, desists from committing suicide and spends the whole night there on the ground in the company of Taralīkā, bitterly weeping over the loss of Puṇḍarīka. Here the reader cannot fail to notice the oratorical powers of the author.

द्वितीयेनेव.....ऋषिअलगमनेन—Mahāśvetā looked upon the sudden disappearance of Kapīñjala, the dearest friend of Puṇḍarīka, as the 2nd death of her प्रियतम viz. her lord Puṇḍarika. प्रियतम evidently refers to Puṇḍarika and not to Kaṣiṇjala although the latter was प्रियतम to her. If we take प्रियतम as referring to Kaṣiṇjala, the force of द्वितीयेनेव is totally lost. द्विगुणीकृतः शोकः यस्याः; सुतरामदी.....हृदय—her heart broke all the more. किकर्तव्यतामूढा—Being utterly at (my) wits' end. तदवलोक्य—तत् refers to the mysterious phenomenon. स्त्रीस्वभाव-कातरा—स्त्रीस्वभावेन कातरा. Women are timid by their very nature. शोकाभि.....भिभूता—Taralikā was overpowered by fear (at the sight of the phantom as she believed it to be) that eclipsed or set at naught her grief. वेपमाना अङ्गयष्टिः यस्याः—her slender frame began to shake as a result of the fright that possessed her then. वराकी—poor, miserable, wretched, unhappy. This expression is often used to show pity. “यत्किमुज्जिहानजीवितां वराकीं नानुकम्पसे” Mal X. विषण्णहृदया—The cause of this is ‘मम मरणशङ्कया—she apprehended that her mistress might give up her life and hence she was much dejected. She now advances one and all arguments in order to dissuade her mistress from committing a rash act viz., suicide प्रायेण चैवंविधाः दिव्याः स्वप्नेऽप्यविसंवादिन्यो भवन्त्याकृतयः—Such divine personages generally are not inconsistent even in dreams. What then in actual life? She could not therefore see any reason to disbelieve in what he said. निर्दयाक्रन्दजर्जरस्वरक्षयक्षामेण—with the voice parched and failing on account of merciless crying.

Mahāśveta gets up early next morning, collects Puṇḍarika's belongings and disgusted with the world, prepares to lead a perfectly restrained life, practises penance and worships Siva. Her parents, getting the news of their daughter, try to take her home unsuccessfully, implore her to desist from the adventure. In the end they return home. Since that day, she has been practising a rigorous course of penance but her heart is full of love for Puṇḍarika. She condemns herself and brings her story to a close and weeps bitterly.

प्रत्युषसि—in the early morning. Note the use of words बुद्धा, ज्ञात्वा, निरूप्य etc.—all having the same meaning. Her father and mother went there to persuade her to go home but she was very adamant about her resolution. They, therefore, went back disappointed. गृहानयासीत्—Note the use of the plural (गृहान्), साहमेवविधा etc. Note how very harsh words are used by Mahāśvetā in condemning herself and her cruel fate. निरवलम्बना—without any support. कृतब्राह्मणवधमहापातक्या—who had done as great a sin as killing a Brahmin. This was considered to be one of the 'Great Sins' (महापातकः). शशिनमिव शरन्मेघशकलेन—like the autumnal moon by a portion of a cloud. Autumnal moon which is compared Mahāśvetā's face, is very bright. The garment is parallel to the portion of cloud (मेघशकल).

Chandrāpīḍā filled with sympathy, affection and regard for her, consoles her saying that she is doing a great deed in practising penance and not weeping uselessly. He condemns the system of अनुमरण on various grounds, cites examples where women survived their husband.

प्रथममेव—The idea is that Chandrāpīḍā had already developed some regard and affection for her. But this incident increased his regard for her all the more. स्वया तु कर्मणैव etc.—The idea is that ordinary persons show their bereavement by fruitlessly shedding tears as they are not capable of doing something befitting the dead. But Mahāśvetā was not an ordinary woman. Besides she was doing something that was not only futile. Why then should she shed tears?

सुनासीर = Indra—the king of Gods. यदेतदनुमरणं नाम तदतिनिष्फलम्—This method of dying after a person is certainly futile. For even by the other person's death the dead person is not at all likely to regain life. मोहविलसितं an action done under the influence of infatuation रभसाचरित—rash (रभसा) action. In this paragraph the idea of committing suicide on the death of our dear one has been completely refuted. Bāṇa's curious method of stating the same idea in several ways is prominently noticeable in this paragraph. अन्यामेव—A person thus committing suicide does not certainly meet the departed one but in fact has to lead a miserable 'after-life'. On the other hand waiting for the happy day of re-union is wiser. To emphasise this point Bāṇa enumerates a list of legendary women who were thus re-united with their husbands. Firstly Rati who was reunited with her husband Madana who was burnt to ashes by Lord Śiva. सकलाबलाजनहृदयहारिणि—who attracted the hearts of all the women. Secondly Vārṣneyi सावश्वविजित etc. अवश्या सहितं (with contempt) विजितं यत् सकलं राजकं तस्य मौलौ यानि कुसुमानि तैः वासितं (scented) अशेषं पादपीठं (foot stool) यस्य. This indicates the king's greatness. किंदममुनिशाप etc.—For detailed mythological references vide Appendix IV. शापानलेन्धनतां—a fuel to the fire of curse. बालशशिनीव नयनानन्दहेतौ—who was delightful to the eye like the young moon. पञ्चत्वं गम् = to die i. e. to be mixed with the five elements, पृथ्वी, अप्, तेजस्, वायु and आकाश from which the human body is fashioned (पञ्चमहाभूतशरीर). भ्रातृशतोत्सङ्गलालितां—fondled on the laps of hundred brothers. Dhṛtarāṣṭra had a hundred sons दुर्योधन, दुःशासन etc. अकृतप्राणपरित्यागां—that did not give up her life. For these mythological references the student should go through Appendix IV carefully.

प्रोन्मुच्येतापि.....मुखीमकारयत् ।

Chandrāpīḍa further argues: why not take a chance, assured as you are. He quotes examples from history where persons were revived. Feeling hopeful of Puṇḍarīka's revival, he bids her rely on the all powerful Destiny. He, in the end, requests her not to condemn herself and offers water to clean her face.

भगवत्या etc—All these instances clearly point to the wisdom in continuing to live. But there is another argument besides. And that is the promise given to Mahāśvetā by the Divya Puruṣa. गिरि वैतथ्यमास्पदं कुर्यात्—How can one regard his word as false? What kind of union can there be while he is dead? Therefore it is clear that in promising re-union the Divya Puruṣa had in view the idea of bringing Puṇḍarīka back to life. The prowess of these personages is great. By way of illustration the author now quotes some mythological accounts. For these vide Appendix IV. आशीविषविलुप्तजीविता—whose life was put an end to by (the poison of) serpent. स्वायुषोर्धेन—by half of his life शरापहतप्राणं—whose life was snatched away by arrows अश्वत्थामास्त्रपावकपरिमुष्ट—अश्वत्थाम्नः अस्त्रमेव पावकः (fire) तस्मिन् परिमुष्टं (baked), उत्तराप्रलापोपजनितकृपः—उत्तरायाः प्रलापैः उपजनिता कृपा यस्मिन्. बलवती च नियतिः—Fate is indeed powerful. अतिपिशुनानि—extremely cruel. प्रक्षालितमुखीमकारयत्—made her wash her face. Taralikā's and Chandrāpīḍa's advice to Mahāśvetā who was inclined towards committing suicide is an excellent specimen of Bāṇa's power of argument, his inexhaustible stock of mythological allusions and the confident manner in which he tries to convince the reader.

APPENDIX II

In this Appendix we have collected together from our portion of Kādambarī a list of Poetic Conventions (कवि-संकेत) which, though popular, are not always known to the average student. A succinct explanation of every संकेत has, of course, been stated in the 'Notes' wherever necessary but the following list will be useful in understanding at a glance all the संकेतs which Bāṇa has made use of in this part of the Kādambarī.

A संकेत is defined as 'संकेतो गृह्यते जातौ गुणद्रव्यक्रियासु च । साहित्यदर्पण XII. 5. It is a संकेत, for instance, to imagine that the 'colour' of यशस्, fame, is white. As whiteness is a sign of purity, it produces in our mind a pleasing impression. So does यशस्. Hence it is white. Similarly अपकीर्ति or notoriety is black in colour. For a detailed account of all Poetic Conventions the reader is referred to काव्यमीमांसा of राजशेखर.

Following is the list of संकेतs used by Bāṇa in this part of the Kādambarī :—

अट्टहास, the laughter of Lord Śiva is white in colour—Cf. निजाट्टहासावय-

विमिव । P. 6 L. 3; also हिमहारहरहासधवलैः etc. P. 10 L. 11; also हरहसितसिनस्रोतसं मन्दाकिनीम् etc. P 21 L. 10. The word is used in several places in Sanskrit literature. Cf. for instance राक्षीभूतः प्रतिदिन-मिव श्वम्बकस्याट्टहासः । मेघदूत I. 58.

उदयगिरि—The mountain from where the Sun, Moon etc. seem to rise—the eastern mountain. Cf. P. 37 L. 15.

कला—'Digits' of the moon are said to be eaten up by the Sun by his सुषुम्ना ray during the latter half of every month. In the absence of any scientific explanation to the phenomenon of the 'disappearance' and 're-appearance' of parts of the moon during the latter and former half of every month, it was imagined that a ray of the Sun called सुषुम्ना swallows them up every day during the latter half of every month. This was not a poetic convention alone but also a 'scientific' convention. Modern Science has, of course, disproved this fantastic explanation of a very simple phenomenon. Cf P. 18 LL. 3-4

चकोरः—The bird chakora parallel to the Greek partridge is said to feed himself on the moon beams. Cf. अचकितचकोरचुम्बितमरिचाङ्कुरैः ।

Cf. also ज्योत्स्नापानमदालसेन वपुषा मत्ताश्चकोराङ्गनाः ।—विद्वशालभञ्जिका ॥ I.

चातकः—The bird Chātaka is said to live only on rain-drops. Cf. चातक इव कृत्वा जलमयमाहारम् । P. 2 L. 16 Cf. also सूक्ष्मा एव पतन्ति चातकमुखे द्वित्राः पयोबिन्दवः । भर्तृहरि II. 121 ; also “रे रे चातक सावधान-मनसा मित्र क्षणं श्रूयतां अम्भोदा बहवो वसन्ति गगने सर्वेऽपि नैतादृशाः । केचिद्वृष्टिभिरार्द्रयन्ति धरणीं गर्जन्ति कोचदृथा यं यं पश्यसि तस्य तस्य पुरतो मा ब्रूहि दीनं वचः ॥ Ibid. II 51. The word चातकानन्दनः means ‘rainy season’.

तपस् :—Tapas or Penance is white in colour. Cf. क्षरिपयोधिपयःपूरपाण्डुरेण ...तपोराशिना । P. 5 LL. 13-14.

दक्षिणेक्षणस्फुरणः :—The throbbing of the right eye; this indicates some calamity in the case of women.

धर्मः :—Piety or Religion is said to be white in colour. cf. धर्महृदयादिव निर्गताम् । P. 6 L. 17.

फणी :—Phaṇi or Serpent is said to live on air only. Cf. फणीवाभिनन्द्य जलतरङ्गवातान् ।—P. 2. LL. 13-19. Cf. also हिंसाशून्यमयत्नलभ्यमशनं धात्रा मरुत् कल्पितं व्यालानां पशवस्तृणाङ्कुरभुजः सृष्टाः स्थलीशायिनः ।—भर्तृहरि II.

मकरध्वजः :—Cupid is said to have मकर as his banner P. 37, L. 23.

मदः :—Mada or ichor or rut that exudes from the temples of elephants is black in colour. cf. तमालनीलया दिक्कादवीथ्या । P. 3 LL. 10-11 cf. also मदेन भाति कलभा प्रतापेन महीपतिः । चन्द्रालोक V. 45.

मनस् :—Manas or mind is said to be the ‘first’ sense आद्येन्द्रिय P. 23 L. 12. A human being is said to have six senses viz., mind, eyes, ears, nose, tongue and skin—of which mind is the foremost. It is the internal organ of ‘perception’ and ‘cognition’, the instrument by which objects of sense affect the soul. In the philosophy of Naiyāyikas it is regarded as a द्रव्य or substance and is distinct from आत्मन् or Soul—तदेव सुखदुःखाद्युपलब्धिसाधनमिन्द्रियं प्रतिजीवं भिन्नं नित्यमणु च । तर्ककौमुदी.

मनसिजः :—Manasija or cupid is said to be ‘born’ in the mind. The mind of a person is first smitten by the stroke of Love or Cupid and that is why Cupid is called मनसिज, मनोभव etc.

मन्दाकिनी :—Mandākinī or the Celestial Ganges is said to join at the end of its course the milk-ocean (क्षीरसागर)—cf. मन्दाकिनीमिव क्षीरसागरः प्रणयिनीमकरोत् । P. 14 LL. 10-11.

वसन्तः—Vasanta or the season 'spring' is said to be the best friend of मदन or cupid. cf. हरहुताशनेन्धनीकृतमदनशोकविधुरं वसन्तमिव तपस्यन्तम् P. 11 LL. 7-8.

वासवी दिक्—or the quarter belonging to Indra is the Eastern direction cf. भूसरतां वासवी दिगयासीत् । P. 37 L. 13.

वासुकि—the name of a serpent ; it is said to 'reside' in the tuft of the hair of lord Śiva. cf. पशुपतिजटाबन्धार्तवासुकि...etc P. 3 L. 17.

सवित्र or the Sun is said to ride a chariot to which green horses are harnessed while traversing the sky. Cf. हारीतहरितवाजिनि सवितरि । P. 36 L. 18. Cf. also in ऋग्वेद—भद्रा अश्वा हरितः सूर्यस्य । चित्रा एतग्वा अनुमाद्यासः ॥

शशिकला—or Crescent Moon is also said to 'reside' on the head of Lord Śiva. Cf. ईशानशिरःशशिकलामिवानुपजातरागाम् । P. 8 L. 12 also ईशानशिरः—शशक्कमिव धृतव्रतम् । P. 16 L. 8.

शिव—Lord Śiva has three eyes—अयुग्मलोचन P. 16 L. 9, विरूपाक्ष—P. 8 L. 8. In the following stanza will be found all the 'conventions' about Lord. Śivā, अर्धं दानववैरिणा गिरिजयाप्यर्धं शिवस्याहृतं देवेभ्यं जगतीतलं स्मरहराभावे समुन्मीलति । गङ्गा सागरमम्बरं शशिकला नागाधिपः क्षमातलं सर्वज्ञत्वमधीश्वरत्वमगमत्त्वां मां च भिक्षाटनम् ॥ .

Additional Notes and Mythological References.

अघमर्षण—“अघं मृष्यते उत्पन्नत्वेऽपि नाशनेन कर्माक्षमत्वात् सङ्घते अनेन मृष-ल्युट” Literally the term means ‘expiatory’ ‘removing or destroying sin’. It is a term usually applied to a prayer repeated by the Brāhmaṇas. This prayer is contained in the 190th hymn in the tenth Maṇḍala of the Rgveda—‘ऋतं च सत्यं च etc.’. The ऋषि to whom this सूक्त was revealed was अघमर्षण माधुच्छन्दस—a sage born in the family of विश्वामित्र. He is sometimes called अघमर्ष.
It is believed that when this सूक्त is repeated thrice in water, the most heinous or monstrous of sins such as illicit intercourse with one’s preceptor’s wife, one’s own mother, sister, daughter-in-law are destroyed. Cf. “सर्वेनसामपथ्वसि जह्यं त्रिष्वघमर्षणम्” अमरकोश “*यथाश्वमेधः ऋतुराद् सर्वपापापनोदनः । तथाघमर्षणं सूक्तं सर्वपाप-
प्रणाशनम् ।*” “ऋतं च सत्यं चाघमर्षणं निरन्तरं जले जपन् सर्वपापात् प्रमुच्यते ।” Bāṇa has used this expression in connection with the purificatory power of Mahāśvetā’s glances “त्वदीयावलोकनमपि सर्वपापशमनमघमर्षणमिव पवित्रीकरणायालम् ।” P. 10.

अट्टहास—A loud, boisterous laughter, a horse-laugh, usually of Śivā.
It is here mentioned as the standard of whiteness. “निजाट्टहासा- वयैरिव.....मन्दाकिनीपुण्डरीकैः कृतार्चनम्” P. 5.

अनङ्ग—Literally it means ‘bodiless, limbless, formless or incorporeal.’
It is an epithet of काम—God of love—derived from the fact that his physical body was burnt to ashes by Śiva with the fire in his 3rd eye.
The demon तारक, son of वज्राङ्ग and वराङ्गी, practised penance for ten thousand years on the Pāriyātrā mountain. In virtue of these severe austerities he secured a very valuable boon from Brahmā that he would be killed only by a child seven days old. On account of the power of this boon the demon became a great nuisance to the Gods and defeated even Indra. The Gods learned that the demon would be killed by the son of Śankara and Pārvatī alone. But Śiva was a Yogi practising penance on the Himālayas and as such his mind was foreign to the affairs of

to us. We acknowledge our debt to the author.

love. At the same time the Gods could wait no longer. They, thereupon, sent Madana as their envoy to seduce the Lord's mind towards Pārvaṭī so that their deliverer from Tāraka may be born. The Lord, feeling that he was insulted and not tolerating this unwanted and much despised obstruction to His austerities, opened his third eye and reduced Cupid to ashes because he was impudent enough to make overtures to Him. Rati, the wife of Madana, wept bitterly over the loss of her consort. Moved with her piteous cries the Lord took compassion on her and revived her husband in a bodiless form. Since then, Madana is known as अनंग. Subsequently, however, the Gods succeeded in inducing the Lord to marry Pārvaṭī. Soon Skanda was born to the divine couple and he killed the demon तारक, when he was only seven days old. Cf. मत्स्यपुराण 130-9, 146 ; and पद्मपुराण—सृष्टिविण्ड 42.

अप्सरस्—अद्भ्यः सरन्ति उद्गच्छन्ति or अप्सु सरन्ति प्रचलन्ति याः ताः अप्सरसः । “अप्सु निर्मथनादेव रसात्तस्माद्हरन्त्रियः । उत्पेतुर्मनुजश्रेष्ठ तस्मादप्सरसोऽभवन्” रामायण-बाल०. The Apsarases are a class of female divinities or celestial damsels. Originally they were water-deities but later on they came to be looked upon as residents of heaven and were regarded either as wives of the Gandharvas or the courtesans of the Gods (स्वर्वेष्ट्याः). They are endowed with fascinating beauty and are adepts in the art of dancing and singing. They are very fond of bathing and can quickly change their forms. Endowed as they are with superhuman powers, they are many times successfully employed by Indra to seduce persons and sages embarking on severe austerities. Cf. “या तपोविशेषपरिशङ्कितस्य महेन्द्रस्य सुकुमारं प्रहरणं.....सा नः प्रियसखी उर्वशी.....बन्दिप्राहं गृहीता” विक्रमो I. They are also spoken of as loving heroes who die as martyrs on the field of battle. Cf. “परस्यरेण श्रतयोः प्रहर्त्रोत्क्रान्त-वाय्वोः समकालमेव । अमर्त्यभावेऽपि कयोश्चिदासीदेकाप्सरःप्रार्थितयोर्विवादः ॥” R. VII-53. Mahāśvetā commences her story with an account of the fourteen families of these celestial damsels as originating from different sources. The passage from the Rāmāyaṇa, quoted above, says that the Apsarases were sprung from the ocean when it was churned (by the Gods and the demons) while the Mahābhārata speaks of them as the daughters of कश्यप and अरिष्टा. Cf. आदिपर्व 46, 49.

Amarakoṣa lays down that the word अप्सरस् is always to be used in the plural ‘जियां बहुष्वप्सरसः स्वर्वेष्ट्या उर्वशीमुखाः’ but this injunction is not strictly observed as the singular, as also the form अप्सरा is to be met with occasionally. Cf. 'देवैर्मेनका नाम अप्सराः प्रेषिता नियमविघ्नकरिणी' Sak. I "एकाप्सरः"; 'अनप्सरेव प्रतिमासि' विक्रमो 1; cf. also "आपः सुमनसो वर्षा अपसरः सिकताः समाः । एते क्षियां बहुत्वे स्युरेकत्वेऽप्युत्तरत्रयम्" शङ्खार्णव.

अभिमन्यु—अभिवृद्धः मन्युः यस्य. अभिमन्यु is the name of the son of Arjuna and Subhadra the sister of Kṛṣṇa. He is also known by the metronymic 'Saubhadra'. अभिमन्यु was so called because at his birth he appeared to be intrepid, heroic and long-armed. Cf. महा० आदि 221/. During the great Bhārata war, Droṇa, the commander of the forces of the Kauravas, cut off Arjuna the invincible hero on the side of the Pāṇḍavas, from the van of battle by a strategic diplomacy and engaged him in a fight elsewhere. The general of the Kauravas, realising that there was nobody to break through the array of the Kaurava army, arranged his forces in the peculiar 'battle-array' called चक्रव्यूह and threw the gauntlet for the Pāṇḍava warriors. Yudhiṣṭhira, finding that there was no other hero on his side to accept the challenge, became very uneasy. Abhimanyu, who had learned the art of entering the व्यूह in his pre-natal condition from Kṛṣṇa while it was being explained to Subhadra, removed the anxiety from his mind by offering himself to break through the array with the help of his other uncles. Yudhiṣṭhira gave his consent to the lad's proposal though much too reluctantly. Accordingly he entered it triumphantly, killed many a warrior on the Kaurava side and gave much trouble for a time even to such veteran and elderly heroes as Droṇa, Karṇa, Duryodhana etc. Cut off as he was from Bhīma and others, he could not hold out for long against the united opposition and attack of the Kaurava-Warriors. The odds were certainly against this young hero and this peerless warrior of only sixteen summers was foully slain by the Kauravas. It is believed that he was the partial incarnation of Varchā, the son of Soma and was destined to die young.

Abhimanyu had two wives—वत्सला the daughter of Balarāma and उत्तरा the daughter of the king of the Virāṭa. The latter was pregnant when Abhimanyu breathed his last and gave birth to a still-born son who was later on revived by Lord Kṛṣṇa and named परीक्षित. परीक्षित was the only descendant of the Pāṇḍavas. It was through him that the family could continue. He was born dead as a result of the missile of अश्वत्थामन्. Cf. अभिमन्यु- तनयं च परीक्षितमश्वत्थामपावकपरिप्लुष्ट.....P. 52-LL. 10-12--He succeeded Yudhiṣṭhira to the throne of हस्तिनापुर but was bitten to death by a snake. The Kali Age is deemed to have commenced with his reign.

 For अभिमन्यु and परीक्षित cf. the following—Mbh. द्रोण० 34-49;
 Mbh. आ० पर्व 95, 221; Mbh. आ० 40-44. 63; आश्व० 69.

अमृतः—Nectar, ambrosia, beverage of the Gods. It is supposed to have been churned out of the ocean along with the other thirteen famous jewels. It often indicates the height of pleasure or gratification.
 It is repeatedly spoken of as a standard of whiteness, sweetness and coolness in Sanskrit Literature.

अरिष्टाः—The daughter of Dakṣa Prajāpati and Asikni and wife of Kaśyapa. The Gandharvas and the Apsarases are her progeny.
Bāṇa says that she had six sons Tumburu and others of whom Hamsa, the father of Mahāśvetā, was the eldest. “अरिष्टायास्तु पुत्रस्तुम्बुरुप्रभृतीनां सोदर्याणां षण्णां ज्येष्ठो हंसो नाम..... P. 14 LL. 3-6 but other accounts say that she had more than six sons of whom Hamsa was one and not the eldest. It seems that Bāṇa had in mind only one version of the account of Ariṣṭā.

अरुन्धतीः—न रुन्धती प्रतिरोधकारिणी—There are several versions about her parentage and family ties. Thus, according to वायुपुराण 2-9-79, 83; लिंगपुराण 1-63; 78-80; कूर्मपुराण 1-19-20, she is the daughter of Kaśyapa and sister of Nārada and Parvata. According to कालिकापुराण 23, she is the adopted daughter of the sage Medhātithi, having been produced from the ज्योतिष्टोम sacrifice which the sage was performing but भागवत (III, 24) and मत्स्य (201-30) पुराणसं speak of her as one of the nine daughters of Kardama Prajāpati and his wife Devalhūtī. Almost all the versions agree in representing her as the wife of the Ṛṣi Vasiṣṭha though the circumstances leading to her marriage with the illustrious sage are differently narrated by them. In Hindu mythology she is extolled to the skies, having been regarded as a specimen of conjugal excellence and wifely devotion and chastity and so is invoked by the bridegroom in the nuptial ceremonies. On account of these virtues of hers she is ranked among the सप्तर्षिः and is venerated and praised along with the other constituent planets of the Ursa Major. She acted as the guardian of Śitā

when she was abandoned by Rāma. It is believed that the morning star personified by Arundhati is not seen by those whose doom is impending “न पश्यति सनक्षत्रां यस्तु देवीमरुधतीम्। ध्रुवमाकाशगङ्गां च तं वदन्ति गतायुषम् ॥”

अर्जुन—Name of the third Pāṇḍava, son of Kuntī by Indra. He was so named because he was ‘pure in actions’ “युधिष्ठ्यां चतुरन्तायां वर्णो मे दुर्लभः समः। करोमि कर्म शुद्धं च तेन मामर्जुनं विदुः।” He is known as ऐन्द्र, पार्थ, गुडाकेश, सव्यसाचि, धनंजय, फाल्गुन, जिष्णु, श्वेत-वाहन, गण्डीविन् etc. He learned the difficult art of archery from Droṇa and owing to his mastery and craftsmanship in it he became the most favoured pupil of his preceptor. It is by his skill in archery that he won Draupadī for himself and his brothers. One day while Yudhiṣṭhira and Draupadī were having a private conference in the आयुधागार, he met some Brāhmaṇas at the gate, who had come to lodge a complaint with the king that the sacrificial cows were stolen away. Arjuna assured them of his protection, went to the आयुधागार to take his missiles and weapons, fought with the miscreants and restored to the Brāhmaṇas their lost property. In going to the आयुधागार and disturbing युधिष्ठिर and Draupadī in their talks, he committed a transgression though it was an involuntary one. Cf. Mbh. आ. 214. As settled among the brothers, he had to go on a temporary exile during which he visited the subterranean world and married the Nāga-princess Uliṣṭī by name. In the course of his pilgrimage to different places he came to Manipura where he fell in love with चित्रांगदा, the daughter of चित्रवाहन, the king of Manipura. He requested the king to give his daughter in marriage to him and the king did so on the condition that the son born to her would stay with him. Arjuna agreed, married the princess, stayed in the capital for three years and a son, who was named बभ्रुवाहन afterwards, was born to the pair. During the great Bhārata war Arjuna vanquished many redoubtable warriors on the Kaurava side and was mainly responsible for the success of the Pāṇḍavas. At the conclusion of the war, Yudhiṣṭhira was formally installed on the throne. Yudhiṣṭhira resolved to perform the अश्वमेध and the horse was let loose with Arjuna as its guardian. It was challenged at various places by many kings and warriors who had, however, to yield to Arjuna and acknowledge the sovereignty of Yudhiṣṭhira. When the horse came to Manipura, Babhruvāhana, his son, came out to receive his father but was aptly rebuffed by the latter for not challenging him as every क्षत्रिय is expected to do. Ulūpi, who had come there, also persuaded her step-son to fight with Arjuna. A terrific battle ensued between the father and the son: the latter killed the former and committed suicide. चित्रांगदा wept bitterly over her loss and blamed Ulūpi who was chiefly responsible for the calamity. Ulūpi, thereupon, brought her husband to life by a charm. It is this story that is referred to in our portion—"अर्जुनं चाश्वमेधतुरगानुसारिणमात्मजेन बभ्रुवाहननाम्ना समरशिरसि शरापट्वत्तप्राणमुलूपी नाम नागकन्यका सोच्छ्वासमकरोत् ।" P. 52-LL. 8-10

Having roamed over the whole of the continent, the horse returned with Arjuna loaded with spoils and tributes from the kings who had become the vassals of Yudhiṣṭhira. The horse-sacrifice was duly performed.

अश्वत्थामन्—अश्वत्थेव स्याम बलं यस्य । अश्वत्थामन् is the name of the son of Droṇa and Gautamī Kṛpī. He was so named at the instance of a divine voice because on his birth, he neighed like the heavenly horse उच्चैःश्रवस् and shook the three worlds. Cf. "अश्वत्थेवास्य यत्स्थाम नदतः प्रदिशो गतम् । अश्वत्थामैव बालोऽयं तस्मान्नाम्ना भविष्यति" ॥ द्रोण० 196—He was a celebrated hero on the side of the Kauravas, who combined in himself the Brahmanical traits of saintliness and austere penance with the bravery and might of the Kṣatriyas. He was fiery-tempered, easily susceptible to provocation, valiant and was looked upon as a partial incarnation of Rudra. द्रोण० 201—Though a great admirer of the Pāṇḍavas he remained true to his salt and helped the Kauravas with all his might by killing great heroes in the camp of the Pāṇḍavas. His altercation with Karṇa over the question of the nominee for the generalship of the Kaurava army after Droṇa elucidates practically all the traits of his character. For this Cf. वेणीसंहारं III—Towards the end of the epic war, Duryodhana fatally wounded and disabled in his fight with Bhīma, invested him with the robes of the general. One day at night, while he, Kṛpācārya and Kṛtavarmā were resting under a tree, he saw an owl raiding the nest of a crow and devouring the young ones inside. Realising the moral of this apparently trifling incident, he, in spite of the expostulations of his companions, attacked the slumbering camp of the Pāṇḍavas (fortunately the Pāṇḍavas were away from their camp), stabbed धृष्टद्युम्न (who had brutally murdered his father), slew the five sons of Draupadī and massacred all the other warriors in the camp; he ran to inform Duryodhana of what he had done for him. The Kaurava king died in peace on learning this news comfortable to him even in his violent tortures. The next morning Draupadī, knowing of her great loss, clamoured for the head of the murderer but consented to forego her demand provided she would have the pleasure of seeing on the person of युधिष्ठिर the precious jewel that अश्वत्थामन् wore on his head. Bhīma pursued अश्वत्थामन्; Arjuna fearing that his brother would not withstand the power of the missiles of the Brāhmaṇa-warrior, met him (अश्वत्थामन्) in a combat which, with the missiles and counter-missiles used by the two great warriors, even threatened to burn the three worlds. To avoid this dire calamity व्यास intervened and persuaded अश्वत्थामन् to part with the jewel. Cf. Mbh. सौप्तिकपर्व 5, 8, 9, 11. अश्वत्थामन् is one of the seven चिरंजीविन्स—"The immortals" Cf. "अश्वत्थामा बलिव्यासो हनुमांश्च बिभीषणः । कृपः परशुरामश्च सप्तैते चिरंजीविनः ॥" The synonyms of अश्वत्थामन् are द्रौण, द्रौणायन etc.

आञ्जनः—An epithet of Māruti; son of Añjanā. In her former birth Añjanā was a celestial nymph by name Puñjakasthālī but she was cursed to be born on earth. In her life on earth she became the daughter of a monkey named Kunjara and wife of another monkey chief named Kesarin. One day while she was seated on the summit of a mountain, her upper garment was displaced by the wind who being enamoured of her charms assumed a human form and expressed his desire to co-habit with her. She implored the god not to violate her chastity to which he gave his consent and disappeared saying that since his desire was fixed on her, she would deliver a son as powerful as himself (in strength and lustre). In due course Añjana gave birth to a son who was named Māruti because he was the son of Māruta. According to स्कन्दपुराण II-40, Añjanā practised severe austerities for one thousand years whereafter Vāyu revealed himself to her and assured her that her desires would be fulfilled on the 15th day of the month of Chaitra. Through the favour of the same god, she delivered a son on that day, who was afterwards named Māruti.

उत्तरा :—Name of the daughter of विराट and wife of Abhimanyu. In virtue of their agreement with the Kauravas, the Pāṇḍavas had to pass one year incognito. They decided to spend it at the Court of Virāṭa and repaired to it assuming different forms. Arjuna disguised himself as a eunuch and gave his name as Brhannalā. He was asked to wait upon the princess of Virāṭa country viz. Uttarā. During his stay there, Arjuna initiated the princess into the art of dancing and singing. The news about the incognito residence of the Pāṇḍavas at the court of Virāṭa reached Duryodhana and the latter attacked the country of Virāṭa with a powerful army and stole away the cows of the king. Arjuna, however, defeated the forces of the Kauravas and restored the cows to the king. On account of this feat of Arjuna, Virāṭa was much pleased with him and offered his daughter Uttarā in marriage to him. But Arjuna declined since he had accepted her as his pupil and his relations with her were of a sacred character. He, however, gave his consent to the proposal of the marriage of the princess with his son Abhimanyu, Cf. also the note on अभिमन्यु. For references to Uttarā in the Mbh. see विराटपर्व 11-18; सौप्तिकपर्व 15-31.

उल्लूखी :—Name of a Nāga-princess whom Arjuna married. See note on Arjuna.

उज्जयिनी—Also known as अवन्ती is the capital of the अवन्ती country.

“According to Hemacandra this country is synonymous with Mūlvā or the modern Mālavā but the latter country covered in ancient times, as now, a wider area than Avanti.....In the Mbh. Avanti appears to have extended on the south to the banks of the Narmadā and on the west probably to the banks of the Myhe or Myhi”. उज्जयिनी or the modern Ujjain is reckoned to be one of the seven sacred cities to die at which is considered to be a means to secure eternal bliss or happiness. Cf. अयोध्या मथुरा माया काशी काञ्ची अवन्तिका । पुरी द्वारावती चैव ससैता मोक्षदायिकाः ॥ Ujjain stands on the road leading from the busy ports of the west coast to the markets of the interior and combines the advantages of a favourite place of pilgrimage with those of a great commercial depot. This city was recognised as the head-quarters of Indian astronomy and as the first meridian from which longitudes were computed. The famous observatory of Ujjain, even today, stands proudly, indicating India's ancient glory. In ancient days उज्जयिनी was also the capital of विक्रमादित्य.

कमलयोनि—An epithet of Brahmā, the lord of creation. He is so called because in the mythology he is spoken of as having been sprung from the lotus shooting up from the navel of Lord Viṣṇu. Cf. मत्स्यपुराण 169-2; महा० वनपर्व 273, 45. Originally he had five heads but now he is represented as the four-faced deity because one of his heads was cut off by Śiva with the ring-finger or burnt down with the fire of His third eye. The accounts of creation differ widely from one another but in almost all of them Brahmā is said to be the progenitor of all the worlds. In the mythology he is said to have created the worlds by an illicit connection with his own daughter Sarasvatī. Brahmā is known by various other epithets most of which have a reference to his birth from the lotus of Viṣṇu.

कलशयोनिः—One of the epithets of the sage अगस्त्य or अगस्ति who is much esteemed in the Paurāṇic as well as in the pre-Paurāṇic literature. He is also known as मैत्रावरुणि, कुम्भजन्मन्, घटोद्भव, etc. All these names as also the derivation of अगस्त्य (अगः कुम्भः तत्र स्त्यानः संहत इति अगस्त्यः;) are derived from the mythical account of his birth. Mitra and Varuṇa saw the celestial nymph Urvaśī at a sacrificial session. They were much fascinated by her charm; their seed fell at her sight. A part of it dropped into a pitcher and the remainder into water. From the former अगस्त्य was born and from the latter वसिष्ठ. Cf. मत्स्यपुराण 61-201; पद्मपुराण—सृष्टिलखण्ड 22; महा० वन० 98, शा० पर्व 344 etc. Many stories are told to indicate his possession of mystic powers. He humbled the much-conceited Vindhya mountain by making him prostrate before him when it threatened to touch the solar disc and cover it up. (विन्ध्याख्यं नगं अस्यति or नगं विन्ध्याचलं स्त्यायति स्तभ्नाति इति अगस्त्यः।). Cf. also Mbh. वन. 104. He is also said to have swallowed up in but one mouthful the whole of the ocean in order to assist Indra and the Gods in their fight against the Kāṇḍeyas. These demons concealed themselves in the waters of the ocean and menaced the Gods in more ways than one. It was because of this great feat of Agastya that these demons were routed by Indra. When after the fight Agastya was requested to restore the ocean in its original size, the sage told the Gods that he had fully digested it. He is therefore known as पीताम्बि, समुद्रचुलुक etc. Cf. पद्मपुराण—सृष्टिलखण्ड 19 and Mbh. वन० 105. It is this legend that Bāṇa has referred to in “येन प्रलयवराहघोणाभिघातभीता भूतघात्री कलशयोनिपानपरिकलितसकलसलिलं सागरमवतीर्णा । P. 1 LL. 15-16. According to another legend he cursed king Nahusa to be a serpent. Cf. महा० अनु० I-57 स्कन्दपुराण I-i-15. In the Rāmāyaṇa this sage अगस्ति is extolled much. It was he who kept under control all the evil spirits of the south and consumed the राक्षस Vātāpi by name and burnt to death his brother. Agastya is particularly worshipped in the south.

कार्तिकेय—कृत्तिकानां अपत्यं इति कार्तिकेयः also known as स्कन्द, अग्निभू, गङ्गापुत्र, षडानन, षण्मुख, शरजन्मन्, क्रौञ्चारि, क्रौञ्चदारक, सेनानी, तारकजित् the first six of which names have a reference to the circumstance about his birth and the last four are derived from his exploits. Indra apprehending that the son of Śiva and Pārvatī would be more than a match for him and would perhaps usurp his throne deputed Agni to disturb the divine couple in their privacy. As a result a part of the seed of Śiva fell upon the ground, which Agni was asked to bear lest he would be cursed. Agni unable to sustain the power of the वीर्य cast it into the Ganges who transferred it to the six Kṛttikas while they were enjoying a plunge into its waters. Each one of the six Kṛttikas conceived and brought forth a son. These six sons were combined together to form one child of a superhuman form of six heads, twelve hands and an equal number of eyes. According to another version Ganges cast the seed of Śiva, into a thicket of reeds which conceived and delivered a son. Hence the boy was known शरजन्मन्. As Kārtikeya was born of the fallen seed of Śiva, he is called स्कन्द. He was chosen the general of the gods in their fight against the most powerful demon तारक whom he killed. Hence he is called सेनानी, तारकारि or तारकजित्. Another exploit of his was that he pierced the क्रौञ्च mountain. Hence his epithet क्रौञ्चारि or क्रौञ्चदारक. The peacock is his vehicle. Cf. “षण्मुख-शिखण्डिशिखानुम्बिभिः.....” P. 3 L. 14.

Being fondled too much by Pārvatī, Kārtikeya at first pursued a licentious conduct and continued outraging the modesty of the wives of the gods. Owing to the complaints from the goddesses, Pārvatī had to intervene and there followed a complete re-action. Kārtikeya took a vow of looking upon all the women as his mothers and even went to the length of cursing the woman who would visit his temple, to be a widow for her seven succeeding lives. It is on account of this curse pronounced by him on woman-kind that Hindu ladies—married or unmarried—shun the sight of this six-faced God. Cf. also the note on अनङ्ग above. कैलासत्रियमिव दशमुखोन्मूलनक्षोभनिपतिताम्—P. 6-LL. 12-13.

Here is to be found an allusion to the following mythological account. Rāvaṇa, the ten-headed demon, son of Viśravaś and Keśini (or Kaikasi) and hence half-brother of Kubera, became arrogant and tyrannical on the strength of a boon granted to him by Brahmā whom he propitiated by austere penance for ten thousand years and by the offerings of the nine out of his ten heads. (It appears that these heads were subsequently restored to him by the same God). He subdued all the gods and made them his servile followers. Some even acted as his domestic servants. In course of his wandering his aerial car was damaged near Śaravana which lay in the vicinity of Kailāsa (the abode of Lord Śiva). He was forbidden to enter it by Nandī who was guarding its entrance. The haughty demon was much annoyed at this obstruction and tried to uplift the Kailāsa mountain. (According to another version, Rāvaṇa was on his periodical visit to Lord Śiva whose devotee he was. Nandī prevented him from entering the abode of Śiva as the Lord was enjoying Pārvatī's company. Much enraged at this sudden obstruction the demon tried to uproot the mountain itself with his fingers). Śiva was disturbed and pressed the mountain with his thumb so hard that Rāvaṇa's fingers were almost crushed beneath the weight. Rāvaṇa thereupon, praised Śankara with the recitation of the Sāma Veda for one thousand years: the God was pleased with him and released him from his painful torments. It was Śankara who gave him the name Rāvaṇa because he hymned Him loudly. Cf. Rāmāyaṇa उत्तरकाण्ड 16.

गणपति—Name of the son of Śiva and Pārvatī (according to another account of Pārvatī alone as he was fashioned out of the ointment which Pārvatī had applied to her body. Cf. पद्मपुराण सूक्तिकण्ड 43, स्कन्दपुराण VII-1-38, मत्स्यपुराण 153). He is the God of wisdom who removes all the obstacles in the path of the worshipper and is therefore invoked before any religious ceremony is commenced. He is represented as riding a mouse and has the head of an elephant with a single tusk and a big belly. Several legends are told to explain how he came to possess the elephant's head with but one tusk. Pārvatī was enjoying at bath and Gaṇapati was asked to guard the entrance to her bath-room. Gaṇapati, true to his duties, did not allow even Śiva to enter. A fight ensued between the two, in which Śiva cut off the head of Gaṇapati but later on, at the request of Pārvatī, fitted the head of Iudra's elephant instead. Gaṇapati however lost one of his tusks in his skirmish with Parasurāma whose entrance into Śiva's inner apartment was opposed by him. Hence he is known as एकदन्त, एकदंष्ट्र, गजानन etc. The God is a great lover of सिन्दुर because it represents the blood of सिन्दुरासुर whom he killed and whose blood he applied to the whole of his body. Vyāsa, the author of the Mbh., secured this God as a scribe to write to his dictation on the condition that the dictation would be a non-stop affair. It is believed that the several knotty or intricate points that we often come across in the body of the 'Great Epic' were purposely designed by Vyāsa because he wanted a breathing space for himself and at the same time to keep his scribe busy solving those several intricacies till he was able to proceed ahead. Cf. Mbh. आदिपर्व I-112. It is supposed that the सूक्त 'गणानां त्वा' etc. (Rv. II-23-1) was composed in honour of this God. This is, however, doubtful. It can only be said that the origin of the Paurāṇic conception of Gaṇapati dates back to R̥gvedic times.

च्यवन—Also च्यवान (Cf. Rv. X.—19) the name of one of the most celebrated sages of the Bhṛgu family. Pulomā, the wife of the Ṛṣi Bhṛgu, delivered a son rather prematurely being overcome with fright at the sight of the demon Puloma (or) Damana (according to पद्मपुराण पातालखण्ड 14) who entered the retreat of Bhṛgu while the latter was away for his bath and who tried to abduct her being charmed at her personal grandeur. The demon was, however, burnt to death by the child and Pulomā safely returned to the hermitage with her son. The boy was thereupon named च्यवन (or च्यवान). Cf. Mbh. आदिपर्व 4, 6; 67. च्यवन practised severe austerities for a number of years, as a result of which he became old and emaciated and looked haggard and ugly. Owing to some negligence on the part of king Śaryāti who was recreating himself in the forest where च्यवान was practising penance, the sage was much enraged and tormented the king by stopping his urine. The king craved his favour and the fiery sage agreed to cure him of his troubles only if he would give his charming daughter Sukanyā in marriage to him. The king had to give his consent and the lovely Sukanyā was married to this sage far advanced in age. Once the Aświns chanced to see this lady and being much fascinated with her loveliness requested her to elope with them but with the power of her chastity she not only made the divine physicians withdraw their silly proposal but forced them to make her husband young, and gay. They did so. In order to return his obligations towards them he offered oblations for the first time to the twin-gods at the sacrifice of his father-in-law, though these gifts were opposed by Indra. The episode of the gift of youth to च्यवन by the Āświns is referred to in the RV. I—112-6; 4, 10; 117-13; V—74-5 and also in the Śatapatha Brāhmaṇa IV. The later version of this episode is nothing but an amplification of the Vedic account. Aurva and Pramiti were his sons (cf. Mbh. आदिपर्व 4-6, 67) and Ruru (the son of प्रमिती) his grandson (cf. ... च्यवनस्य नत्ता प्रमितितनयो मुनिकुमारको रुर्नाम.....P. 52 LL. 7-8.)

जयद्रथ :—Son of बृद्धक्षत्र and king of the Sindhu, Sauvira and the Śibi countries. He was the brother-in-law of Duryodhana, having married दुःशला his sister. While out a-hunting in the काम्यकवन (where the Pāṇḍavas had taken their abode during their forest-life) he chanced to see Draupadī all alone in the hermitage (the Pāṇḍavas were away on a hunting expedition) and entertaining an evil desire for her asked her to elope with him. She flatly refused. जयद्रथ felt that he was insulted, seated her on his chariot per force and drove at full speed. On their return the Pāṇḍavas came to know of this, pursued जयद्रथ, met him in a deadly combat, subsequently captured him and released Draupadī. He was brought before Yudhiṣṭhira hand-cuffed, made to acknowledge the over-lordship of the Pāṇḍavas and was allowed to go after having been subjected to many insults and humiliations. Since that time जयद्रथ came to hate the Pāṇḍavas. In the great war he joined the Kauravas and was mostly instrumental in hastening the death of Abhimanyu the young heroic son of Arjuna. (Cf. note on अभिमन्यु above). Arjuna, on knowing this, took the vow of killing जयद्रथ before the sun set the next day and carried it out only through the diplomacy of Lord Kṛiṣṇa.

त्रिपुरारि :—त्रिपुरारि, त्रिपुरान्तक, त्रिपुरदहन, त्रिपुरद्विष, त्रिपुरहर are all epithets of Lord Śiva. त्रिपुर are the cities of gold, silver and iron built by मयासुर through the favour of Brahmadeva, in the sky, air and earth respectively and presented by him to the demons ताराक्ष (son of तारकासुर), कमलाक्ष and विद्युन्माली. While presenting these cities to these demons Mayāsura had warned them to behave themselves and not to trouble the Gods. But this wise counsel failed to impress the wicked demons and they pursued such activities as were hostile to the gods. Owing to this continued menace, the gods requested Śankara to destroy the demons and Śiva not only killed them but burnt down the three cities as well.

दक्ष—Name of a celebrated Prajāpati and the chief patriarch of mankind. He is known to be the father of many daughters, twenty-seven of whom were married to the Moon (thus becoming the twenty-seven lunar mansions) and thirteen more were offered in marriage to Kaśyapa. The union of these thirteen daughters of Dakṣa Prajāpati with Kaśyapa produced the gods, the demons, the human beings and the animals. Thus Kaśyapa and the daughters of Dakṣa, whom he married, bear a great share in the important work of creation.

Once the other Prajāpatis were performing a sacrifice for the creation of the universe, when there came this Dakṣa Prajāpati. All the other gods but Śankara and Brahmā paid their respects to him. Dakṣa felt himself insulted by his son-in-law Śiva and in order to retaliate he performed a sacrifice where he not only did not invite Śiva, the chief of gods, and his daughter Satī but did not even care to inform them. Satī came to know of the festivities at her father's place from the gods who were returning to their heavenly abodes after receiving their share in Dakṣa's sacrifice. Satī, thereupon, implored her husband to go to the sacrifice but the god refused. Satī went there alone and though she was cordially received by her mother and sisters, she was greatly insulted by her father. Not being able to put up with those humiliations, she threw herself into the fire and thus perished. When Śiva came to know of this tragedy, He was much provoked. He pulled off a hair from his matted tresses, dashed it vehemently on the ground, created a fiery and ferocious demon from it and despatched him to the scene of Dakṣa's sacrifice to destroy it. He came there accompanied by many demi-gods, routed the gods and the officiating priests, destroyed the sacrifice and even killed Dakṣa himself. According to another account, it was Śankara who destroyed the sacrifice and slew Dakṣa who was running away assuming the form of a deer. Śiva restored him to life and the latter thereafter acknowledged the supremacy of the God.

Dakṣa is also referred to in the Vedic Literature. Cf. RV. X-72-4-5. In the Śatapatha Brāhmaṇa II-iv-4-1 it is said that Dakṣa Prajāpati performed a sacrifice for the achievement of progeny and prosperity. This sacrifice came to be called दाक्षायण or वसिष्ठयज्ञ, (Vasiṣṭha being another name for Dakṣa).

दुःशला—Name of the only daughter of धृतराष्ट्र, given in marriage to Jayadratha*. (Cf. note on Jayadratha.)

नलकूबर—Name of one of the two sons of Kubera, the other being Maṇigrīva. Once Nalakūbara and his brother, completely lost to all civility owing to the intoxication brought on them by heavy drinking, insulted Nārada, while they were sporting in the waters of the Ganges with their beloveds. Nārada with a desire to teach them a lesson cursed them to be trees for a hundred years. Soon they were metamorphosed into that form but owing to the favour extended to them by the Muni they could retain their consciousness even in that inanimate condition. They were restored to their original status by Lord Kṛiṣṇa whose followers and devotees they became subsequently. Nalakūbara was a very handsome youth and he is often recognised as the standard of manly beauty.

परीक्षित—Name of a King, son of Abhimanyu and grand-son of Arjuna. When out a-hunting in the forest, he felt thirsty. While searching for water, he came to the hermitage of the Ṛṣi Śamika and requested the sage to give him water to drink. The sage, being lost in meditation, did not hear him. Parīkṣit was much exasperated at this very cold reception and not being able to control his temper, he tied a dead serpent round the sage's neck. Śrngin, the son of Śamika came to know of this and pronounced a curse on the person who had done the mischief that he would be killed by Takṣaka acting under his orders. In spite of the many precautions that Parīkṣit took to prevent the operation of this curse, the king died of a snake-bite, leaving his kingdom to his son Janamejaya. Cf. Mbh. आदिपर्व 40-44 ; 49-51. Cf. also the note on अभिमन्यु.

पांडु—Name of the father of the Pāṇḍavas and king of Hastināpura. Vicitravīrya, the son of Śantanu died without leaving a male issue to continue his line. His mother Satyavati permitted his widow Ambālikā to resort to the niyoga system and produce a son from her (elder) brother-in-law Vyāsa. She did so and delivered a son who was named Pāṇḍu because his mother turned absolutely pale at the sight of Vyāsa who had purposely assumed an ugly appearance when in private with her. Cf. “यस्मात्पाण्डुत्वमापन्ना विरूपं प्रेक्ष्य मामिह । तस्मादेव सुतस्ते वै पाण्डुरेव भविष्यति ॥” Pāṇḍu was brought up by Bhīṣma and also initiated into all the arts by him. Cf. Mbh. आदिपर्व I-130; 63; 64-155; सभापर्व 8-25; विराटपर्व 53-17; आदिपर्व 118-18-20. Prithā (or Kuntī) the daughter of कुन्तिभोज chose him as her husband in the ceremony of स्वयंवर arranged by her father. Later Pāṇḍu also married Mādrī the princess of the Madra country at the request of Bhīṣma. Cf. Mbh. आदिपर्व 121-122. He could not however produce progeny by himself because of the curse pronounced on him by the sage किंदम. The latter, assuming the form of a deer, was having tete-a-tete with a female deer, when Pāṇḍu who was hunting for game in the forest, disturbed him by shooting an arrow at him, thinking that it was a deer (and not a sage masquerading as a deer). The sage, thereupon, cursed him that he would meet his doom under similar circumstances. Cf. Mbh. आदिपर्व 123-7. In virtue of this curse he allowed his two wives to produce sons with the use of a charm they had acquired from the sage Durvāsas. Kuntī gave birth to Yudhiṣṭhira, Bhīma and Arjuna and Mādrī to Nakula and Sahadeva.

Once during spring he was roaming in the forest with his wives. The forest which was in full bloom excited his passion and he, forgetting all about the curse he was suffering from, tried to embrace Mādrī who was following immediately behind him but fell dead in her arms because of the curse he was labouring under. Cf. Mbh. आदिपर्व 134; 136.

पृथा—Name of कुन्ति daughter of शूरसेन, later adopted by कुन्तिभोज. Cf. भागवत 9-24, 39 and पद्मपुराण—सुष्टिलखण्ड 13. Cf. also note on Pāṇḍu above.

प्रमद्वरा—Name of the daughter of Menaka and the Gandharva Viśvāvasu. She was brought up by the Ṛṣi Sihūlakeśa in his hermitage and was married to the ascetic-youth Ruru the son of the Bhārgava Pramiti and the nymph Ghṛtācī. While asleep Pramadvarā was bitten by a snake and she succumbed to the poison. Ruru, however, revived her by offering half of his life to her. Since then he started killing every serpent that he came across, without considering whether it was poisonous or harmless. While out to kill the serpent Dundubha (who was none else but the sage सहस्रपात् undergoing a curse) he was told by him to kill only those serpents which were deadly. The sage सहस्रपात् recovered his former condition at the sight of Ruru. Cf. Mbh. आदिपर्व 8-2; 13; अनुशासनपर्व 8-65 and also the note on च्यवन.

चित्रवाहनः—Name of the son of Arjuna and Citrāṅgada the daughter of चित्रवाहन king of Manipura. Read the note on Arjuna. Cf. Mbh. आदिपर्व 3-81; 237-34; आश्वमेधिकपर्व 79-81; 89-1.

भृंगिरिति :—or भृंगरिति or भृंगेरिति. Some take this as one word while others split it into two भृंगिन् and रिति. They are the names of two of the several attendants of Lord Śiva. They are said to be very deformed.

मेरुः—Name of a fabulous mountain round which all the planets are said to revolve. This forms the centre of several द्वीपs or divisions of the terrestrial world. The mythological accounts do not agree as regards the exact number of these द्वीपs. According to some they are four but others increase their number to seven, nine and sometimes even to thirteen. Almost all these accounts agree in stating that these divisions are situated round the mountain Meru like the petals of a lotus flower and each of them is separated from the others by a vast ocean. The mountain Meru is said to abound in gold and gems.

रूढः—See udder प्रमद्वरा.

वराहघोणाभिघातभीता भूतधात्री.....P. 1-LL. 15-16.

The myth that forms the basis of this observation of the author can be summarised as follows. Hiraṇyāksha, son of Kaśyapa and Diti and twin brother of the notorious demon Hiraṇyakaśipu, became insolent through the power of a boon secured by him from Brahmā. He oppressed the Gods and put them to flight. He fought with Viṣṇu and feeling that he would be defeated by the God, he seized upon the earth and entered the ocean along with it. Viṣṇu assumed the form of a boar, killed the demon and lifted up the earth. It should be noted that the earth did not enter the waters of the ocean of itself, being afraid of the blows from the snouts of the Primordial Boar as Bāṇa would have us to believe but she was carried into the ocean per force by the demon and it was this demon she was afraid of. The wild Boar, on the contrary, saved her. Bāṇa has lost sight of this Paurāṇic story in the height of his imagery to show the excellence of the vast lake over the unfathomable ocean.

सांदीपनि :—Name of a Brāhmaṇa-sage belonging to the Kāśya family and tutor of Kṛiṣṇa and Balarāma. He taught Kṛiṣṇa and his brother the four Vedas, the Upaniṣads, the secret of Dhanurveda, political science and the sixty-four lores. At the end of their course of studies he asked Kṛiṣṇa to restore to him his son Datta by name who was kidnapped by a demon and kept underneath the waters, so that his students may pay off the preceptor's fees. Kṛiṣṇa promised to do so, entered the ocean and brought him back to his father. According to another account Kṛiṣṇa restored the son to his father from the abode of Yama. It is this account that Bāṇa alludes to in उज्जयिन्यां सांदीपनिद्विजतनयमन्तकपुरादपहृत्य त्रिभुवनवन्दितचरणः स एवानीतवान् P. 52 LL. 12-13. Sāndīpani was the resident of Ujjain. Cf. Viṣṇu Purāṇa. V-1 ; भागवत 3-3-2 ; 10-45-31 ; पद्मपुराण उत्तरखण्ड 246.
